PORTLAND (U) — "The people of Oregon have gone crazy spending money," a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor said here Thursday.

Lawrence Wallace, a former state legislator, told a Democratic meeting that "Our officials don't talk about how to economize. They talk about new ways to raise taxes."

Wallace was one of three candidates for the Democratic nomination to speak briefly at Jane Jefferson Club meeting.

The others were Gov. Robert Holmes and Wiley Smith, the Multnomah County Assessor.

Holmes said his administration is working to ease the current recession in Oregon.

"For the first time, we have established an economic planning and development department. Its members have been working diligently to expand our present industry and get more," Holmes said.

Smith told the 70 persons at the meeting that members of the state government "have told you they are all out for the little fellow, but they haven't done anything about it."

The property taxes of homeowners should be cut, Smith said. And he added that too many tax allowances now are being given to big business firms.
