North Salem Twirp Week Underway
By MARILYN SPARKS
It's a change of roles at North Salem High this week as the annual Twirp (The Woman is Required to Pay) Week is scheduled.

During the week it is the girls' privilege instead of the boys' prerogative to open doors, carry books and do other chivalrous chores.

Carolyn Lundaday, chairman of the Twirp Week committee, and her assistants, Tom Finch, Pat Kelley, Sandy Lloyd, Betty McCue and Mary Olson, have planned a varied program for the week.

Each day will have different name and activities. A bulletin board in the North Salem center hall will give notice of each day's doings.

A "zombie court" will dole out punishment to all violators of Twirp Week. Members of the "zombie court" will not be named but will lurk in the halls watching for lawbreakers. "Zombie court" will be in session Thursday noon. All boys wanting girls to carry their books must produce "woodcock tickets" in order for the service to be provided.

The week will climaxed Friday night when a dance will be held from 9 to 12 p.m. in the North High big gym. The dance will be called "Tarantula" in honor of Tarantula Ghou, a Portland television star, who will make a guest appearance.

Couples attending the dance will have to dress in costumes depicting monsters or some famous personality now dead. A "mortician" will intercept each couple at the door and measure the boy for his "coffin length." A fee of 20 cents per foot will be requested from the girl.

Duane Lee, North ASB second vice president, is general chairman for "Tarantula." Wes Armstrong is his assistant.

Cowed Woman Wins Damages for Assault

Editor's Note: Basic legal principles are set forth in this exclusive every-Monday series, "Know the Law," put out as a public service by Willamette University College of Law. Purpose is not to give legal advice as such. Facts and situations vary and readers are cautioned not to apply law to any particular problem without consulting an attorney.

Dilworth came to a tavern at a very late hour. It was closed but he beat on the door and demanded some wine. The tavern owner's wife opened the window, leaned out and told him that the tavern was closed for the night. Dilworth thereupon hurled a hatchet at her; and although it missed her, she was greatly frightened. The tavern owner's wife sought to recover damages for his fright.

This was in England in the year 1348. The court involved was one of the first to recognize that in such a case an "assault" had been committed. The wife was awarded the damages she sought. In a similar case today, over 600 years later, practically all courts would arrive at the same conclusion.

Today's courts point out that the essence of an "assault" is the fear or apprehension created in the mind of the person assaulted. This, of course, must be a reasonable reaction, and the wrongdoer must intend to do the act which causes it.

Ability to Harm
Usually the courts require that the wrongdoer have the apparent ability to cause a harmful or offensive contact with the person claiming to have been assaulted.

In a case about 30 years ago, a tenant was moving from her apartment when the landlord appeared on the scene. Brandishing a pistol, he threatened to shoot the tenant if she persisted in moving from the apartment. He actually pointed the pistol toward her.

When she sued the landlord, he claimed that the pistol was not loaded and so he could not have shot her. The court, in holding the landlord liable, pointed out that the tenant did not know that the pistol was unloaded and so was certainly reasonable in being apprehensive for her immediate safety.

Although it is necessary in such a case that the wrongdoer intend to do the act, it is not necessary that he intend to frighten any specific person in order to be held liable.

Threatens With Grenade
If Dick threatens a teacher by waving a hand grenade and shouting he is going to throw it into the classroom, he will have assaulted all the students who become frightened with the teacher even though Dick had no intent nor desire to harm or frighten the students.

In an early case one man said to another, as he put his hand on his sword, "If the court were not in session, I would not take such language from you." It was decided that there was no assault because the statement clearly indicated that he would do nothing immediately. Therefore, the act could not make one reasonably apprehensive for his immediate safety.

Most courts agree with this. However, if the person making such a statement is so upset or angry that he cannot be trusted as reasonable, then his threat may well be an assault.
