Garlic Bread

Even Simple Recipes Have Their Variations

By MAXINE BUREN, Statesman Woman's Editor

You'd be surprised how many ways an imaginative cook can make garlic bread. This delicacy that is among the tops in popularity has a whole lot more possibilities than one would ever guess.

Most folks use sliced French bread, spread it liberally with softened butter into which has been minced a varying amount of garlic and pop it into the oven to heat well and blend flavors.

In case you are a lover of such flavorful food, you may like to give your garlic bread the de luxe herb treatment thus:

De Luxe Garlic Bread

1 tablespoon marjoram Pinch of black pepper
2 cloves garlic 4 thin slices sour French Bread
2 tablespoons olive oil
1/4 teaspoon salt

Mince garlic and fresh marjoram, mix well with other ingredients. Paint onto slices of bread, put slices under broiler until lightly browned. Serve piping hot.

Recently I tried out a recipe for French bread with garlic. I carefully prepared the dish in the morning, just as the recipe said, then put it into the oven at the correct temperature far enough ahead of the meal so it would be done the moment everyone sat down at table. All went well, except I forgot take it out of the oven until morning, though somewhere along the line the heat had been turned off. I had invented a new recipe for garlic Melba toast, virtues of which seem to be non-existent.

The original recipe I think would have been good: the French bread was prepared the regular way, with garlic and butter, then wrapped in a wet cloth and allowed to stand all day or overnight. Remove from its wrapper, it was then baked at 350 degrees for 15 to 20 minutes until crisp and brown.

Some call garlic bread by a fancier name:

French Bread Bordelaise

1 loaf crusty sour French bread 1 teaspoon dried marjoram
1/4 pound butter crumb fine
1 clove garlic, crushed Grating of black pepper
3 tablespoons grated Italian cheese Pinch of cayenne

Cream butter, add to other ingredients. Split bread lengthwise, put under broiler turned rather low, until surface turns just yellow. Spread with butter mixture, return to broiler until butter bubbles, then put into medium oven until heated through, 5 minutes or so.

I often use individual French loaves available from a local bakery, or the large hard rolls. Sometimes I cut the loaves lengthwise, which makes spreading easier than when a number of slices are cut. I then put the bottoms and tops together with the garlic-butter mixture between. After they are heated through, I make one cut down the center, making four servings from each loaf of bread.

Another variation of garlic bread is made using herbs and garlic salt. Rye bread combines well with the garlic too.

Two Violin and Piano Recitals Are Scheduled

Dalbert and Elizabeth Jeppen will present violin and piano students in two recitals at Zobel's Recital Hall on May 23 and 24 at 7:30 p.m. on Friday evening piano students will play and on Saturday violin students will appear.

Special features on the strong program will be the piano concerto in C Major by Kosschou with John Turnidge as soloist, accompanied by a chamber orchestra and Peter Jeppen, Sylvia Thelen and Susan McGee, who will play a group of trio numbers. Assisting artists on the program are Julie Shiffer, oboe, Karen Turnidge, flute, and Sylvia Thelen, cello.

Playing on Friday will be Carl Jeppen, Candace and Cathy Turnidge, Bonnie Watts, Kathy Ross, Craig, David and Steven Chambers, Barbara Knapp, Vicki Nelson, Sue Schaefer, Janie B. E. N., Dolores Koch, Ann and Marilee Watts, Julie Shiffer, Patricia Stevenson, Ann Lenhart, Susan McGee, Donald Reed and Charles McGee.

Saturday's program will be presented by Donna Greenberg, Ronald Doan, Karen and John Turnidge, Harley Miller, Mary Kay Bent, Richard Reed, Susan McGee, Peter Jeppen and the assisting artists.

The interested public is cordially invited to attend the programs.

Dear Ann Landers She Doesn't Have to Play William Tell

By ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann: My husband says he's not an alcoholic. He claims he drinks only when things get him down. This is every night. Once in a blue moon, when things go right for him, he drinks to celebrate. So there you have it—a man who drinks when things are bad and when things are good. He's drunk all the time.

What worries me to death is that he has guns in the house and when he's plastered he gets like a wild animal. Once he shot a hole in the wall four inches above my head. I ran out of the house and spent the night with neighbors.

Please don't tell me to take him to A.A. Have you ever tried to take a man anywhere he didn't want to go? If people would quit pouring out their sympathy on the man who drinks and save a little for his wife it would be a great help. Thanks for listening. —JUST ONE IN MILLIONS

A.A. can't help anyone who is unwilling to admit he needs it. You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink it—if he prefers something a little stronger.

On the other hand, you don't have to stick around and let a man who is bottled to the eyeballs play William Tell with live ammunition.

In the interests of life and limb I suggest separate roofs. There is always the possibility that if you mean enough to this man, he may straighten around to get you back. If you decide to stay with him get yourself measured for a bullet-proof kimono with a matching hat.

Dear Ann: I'm a junior in college. Several months ago I invited a girl from my home town to come up for some big doings. She wrote and said she couldn't afford it. (The round-trip would have run to $50).

I've written to her several times about coming up for a Spring weekend. She has avoided any reference to this invitation. I don't know for certain if it's the money, or if perhaps she isn't sufficiently interested to make the trip.

I can well afford to pay her expenses and I'd be happy to, but I hate to insult the girl. How shall I handle it?

There's another girl I know back home who isn't exactly repulsive to me. She can afford to go anywhere on her own, and would LOVE to come up for a weekend. Shall I invite the second girl and not take a chance on hurting the first girl's feelings? —B.C.

Why would you be hurting the girl's feelings if you offered to pay her expenses? This could only be a compliment.

If you invite candidate number two merely because she can afford to pay her own freight, you're settling for second best on a cut-rate basis and you know it. Take pen in hand and aim for the top, Boy.

CONFIDENTIALLY: LONELY AND BLUE: Get out of that No-Man's Land and go where there are live human males. If you want to catch fish don't fish in the bathtub.

MRS. DUNNO: If you're wise you'll insist that he go on the trip with the boys. If you make him stay home he'll be impossible to live with for weeks. If you let him go, he'll be a living doll when he gets back.

(Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper and enclose a stamped self-addressed envelope.)
