Don't Look Now...

but... the little dresses worn by actresses starring in their self-written play at the Ringnald home this week, were quite beautiful. Made of white linen and fine lawn, embroidered lavishly and with high necks and long sleeves, the girls looked quite grown up. Hair piled high gave them an added adult look. The problem was how to go to school the next day with their coiffures unspooled for the next night's production. There's to be more about the play in Tuesday's paper.

Home fire... One of the sweetest stories we've heard about returning soldiers is about one Salem son, who asked his parents not to meet him at the train because he had dreamed so long of walking up the front stairs at home and in the door. After many days of constantly staying at home so as not to miss him, his parents were thrilled when answering his ring at the door. Completely satisfied, he looked carefully at all the familiar objects, so happy that everything was just as he had dreamed. Pretty sweet.

No telling... Funny how many people's roofs leak. It's just that sort of inside information one gets on days like these.

Off again... Ho hum, another year before we get out the Christmas tree lights and try to make 'em work. We hope this will be an all time low on lights too, we'll never make it another year. Maxine Buren
