Rotarians Hear Dr. Folkerts

Three factors giving a promising outlook for employment in the immediate future are deferred demands, savings with which to make purchases and installment buying, Dr. Carl Folkerts, professor of economics at Willamette university told Salem Rotarians Wednesday noon.

Prefacing his speech with the remark that he was not a story teller, Dr. Folkerts went on to entertain his audience with a condensed version of what he said "ordinarily consumed six weeks of an economics course in the university."

The close of the talk was opened to questions from the group and brought a larger number of these than is usual. While none were facetious a considerable amount of merriment accompanied the answers.
