C of C Hears Seattle Man; Chest Elects

A better world will be built only by better individuals, W. Walter Williams, Seattle businessman and civic leader, maintained in a dynamic address to Salem Chamber of Commerce and Community Chest members as guests at the chamber's regular Monday luncheon meeting.

Better education for youth, development of individuals with patience and tolerance and of individuals with "greater consideration for the other fellow" would do much to straighten out the troubles of today, Williams declared, illustrating the need for the three projects.

Williams, who drove to Salem from his home city Monday morning after learning his plane transportation to Portland had been canceled because of fog in the latter city, was speaker on the occasion of the Community Chest's annual meeting. He urged that contributors to the chest and directors of it devote special interest to the agencies dealing with the humanities, the development of the individual.
