Dr. Gatke Adds Approval of State Statutes

Called men of "great intellect and great heart," the late Dr. John McLoughlin and Jason Lee were described Thursday as the Oregonians worthiest of commemoration in the national hall of statutory by Dr. Robert M. Gatke, director of northwest research for Willamette university.

Addressing Salem Lions club on the occasion of Oregon's 87th birthday, Dr. Gatke warmly applauded the recent selection of McLoughlin and Lee for the honor, asserting that those two men occupied the center of the stage in the state's formative years and have not been since surpassed in the importance of their contributions to Oregon history.

He said both the Oregon figures have suffered at the hands of inadequate biographers to date. McLoughlin, the Hudson's Bay company representative, was a power among the first settlers and Lee, who established the church and education in the Salem area, greatly encouraged later settlement by his many appeals to the east in behalf of his Indian mission, Dr. Gatke said.
