

Don't Look Now...

but... there's one little war orphan appearing in Salem whom nobody seems concerned over. It's Spring Rhubarb, who robbed of sugar by the war just isn't wanted any more.

Famous outdoor sport... is again showing up. It's the game of hanging over the temporary fence, watching the power shovels excavate. Men can kill more time around a bit of construction, and women aren't supposed to so much as give it a sideways glance. Sometime we're going to have a big hole dug right in the middle of town, build a nice clean fence up for leaning purposes and put up a sign "no men allowed, ladies' day."

Careful selection... When a co-worker in our office heard about the AAUW's solicitation of books for the Russians, he suggested that we send a complete and unabridged set of "How to Win Friends and Influence People."

Out of character... Eugene List proved himself a poor detective on the Ellery Queen program on the air the other night when he failed to discover the guilty party and win the year's subscription to the detective magazine. However, that doesn't make him any less of an expert at the mysteries of the keyboard. You'll remember him as the young blond who played the piano here some years ago, and then became famous as the man chosen by Truman to play at the latter's party for Stalin somewhere or other at a meeting of the Big Three... Maxine Buren.
