BUTTER Give It Your Consideration It does make a difference where the butter you serve on your table is made. It does matter whether the brand you buy is churned and packed in the same modern, sanitary creameries, year in and year out—or simply "picked up" from miscellaneous sources. It matters because butter is perhaps the most important item of food that you serve—the one most likely to affect your own and your children's health—the one food which you particularly want to be able to depend upon.
