YOUR CHILDREN

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

THE children of animals are more fortunate than those of human beings. They come into a world of nature, where things are easily understood. Their parents live the same lives they do, they have no complicated houses, furniture, clothes, automobiles, tall buildings and crashing noises.

The world to the squirrel baby, or the elephant baby, is full of a number of things, but they are things animal life has been accustomed to since there was life on earth—the sky, trees, water, wind, the sun and moon, and, of course, food.

The human baby emerges on a world of pink blankets, frilly people all differently dressed and rooms filled with large peculiar objects. Instead of unfolding simply as the animal baby's world does, it continues in its complexity. Words to be learned, habits to conform to, so many, many new things every day to understand.

But above all, are those formidable creatures, grown-up people, all about him, whose words add daily to his bewilderment.

Almost to the cradle, we are told, the child's reaction to this "society" begins. He is possessed of an unconscious "fear" of all these many things about him. By the time he is a year or two old he has decided what he will do, or nature rather has decided for him. Either he will not himself up to defy the big puzzle of people and things, and demonstrate a will, or he will find that by submitting and showing weakness and appeal and dependence he gets more as he grows up.

Don't be too quick in your judgment, please, nor state too emphatically that it cannot be so. "These dear babies cannot calculate and compare so early in life, you say?" Certainly not, consciously. But nature, and mind, do not wait for consciousness or intelligence to shape themselves. And it is perfectly true, much as I believe in heredity, that some such change does occur very early in life to determine whether a child, and the adult to follow, will be a leader, and a forceful character, or a dependent, sensitive, probably more lovable type.

After all we cannot divide people into black and white. There are not two types but twenty. However, the fact remains that the human baby does come into a world that is not friendly to him because it is on a plane far beyond his comprehension. His adjustment is one of the most interesting processes of will evolution. He does the best he can and cannot be blamed for the road he takes so unwittingly.

To call a docile child good, and a dominant child bad, is all wrong. A child cannot help his natural selection and I think we understand that better now. Extreme friendliness in babyhood probably makes for the stronger child, as he will not have to seek subsurface to get attention.

Green color shows the presence of iron.

Leaf lettuce and the loose varieties of head lettuce that are green clear to the center are richer in vitamin A and iron than the tight, bleached heads of our prefer. Romaine and cross and the curly endive should not be forgotten as salad plants. They are a good green color and may be eaten raw. This makes them important on two counts.

Care should be taken in cooking green vegetables to preserve their color. The three rules for this are: boiling water, uncovered kettle and short cooking period.

It's interesting to know that while tomatoes and carrots and sweet potatoes are not green in color, they have the same vitamin A as the green ones. While nearly all green vegetables contain other valuable substances besides this attribute, when tomatoes or carrots or any green vegetable is served you may be sure that you are providing a food which protects against some of the everyday ailments of mankind.

have you heard it?

snap! crackle! pop! HAVE you tasted the cereal that speaks for itself—have you heard it tell the world how good each toasted bubble is?

Pour milk or cream in a bowl of golden Rice Krispies—then listen to it snap and crackle. Crisp. Delicious. Order a red-and-green package from your grocer. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.
