der a single administration, as proposed in the report. Dr. Hall, in the morning session, broached the consolidation question and said that if it is to be done at all it should be at once. Then, immediately after lunch, Dr. Hall provided a mid session by offering a definite consolidation proposal, the first before the board.

Under his recommendations, the normal schools at Mounouth, Ashland and LaGrande would remain in those administrative units, separate units of the greater University of Oregon. The state college would remain at Corvallis as a separate unit.

Research bureaus would be maintained by all institutions but the information gathered under one system. Dr. Hall did not go further into the scheme of courses under consolidation, but it is presumed they would follow more or less the plan he outlined in the university's briefs on the federal survey.

Kerr Speaks Briefly—Dr. William J. Kerr, president of the state college, in the statement preliminary to his brief cited the move toward consolidation with two alternatives—a university on two campuses but with one head, or a fusion of the university and college on one campus. He said he presided from previous discussions the board favored the former plan.

Dr. Hector McPherson, Linn county representative who has long been interested in school consolidation, urged the board to consider the federal survey from an outside viewpoint in addition to that offered in the curricula arguments of Dr. Hall and Dr. Kerr. He said that all troubles cited by the presidents would be resolved in the solution of the administrative problem.

Chairman Starr revealed that the could be made with greater difficulty, and where, if worst comes to worst, they can be made without actually destroying the functions of the institutions.

Dr. Kerr, in referring to Governor Meier's situation of figures showing that around 20 per cent of the students who enter the Oregon schools as freshmen actually graduate four years later, said that the surveyors in going into this problem did so on a rigid four year basis. They took the names of the entering freshman class in 1924, and sought to discover how many of these graduated in 1928.

Many Oregon students have to work to pay their way through school and those do not graduate in a four-year period, he said. They do, however, graduate, and if one were to find out how many who enter actually graduate the percentage would be around 50.

State traffic officers have sworn to 29 complaints in justice court against motorists alleged to have driven with poor headlights and warrants have been issued. The officers charged the motorists failed to comply with the law which requires that lights be adjusted within 48 hours after provisional arrests have been made.

Those for whom warrants have been issued are J. E. Kilborn, Loran Carls, T. J. Elipoin, Jr., George G. Davis, Andy Dawson, Vesta Nicken, Marvel Johnson, R. A. St. Clair, James Wood, William Carson, Walter Steen, R. C. Riley, C. F. Strathouse, Richard Haug, all of Eugene.

At a light rail Monday night traffic officers stopped 329 cars and gave out 91 tickets. The percentage of legal headlights was found to be slightly more than 73.

They were asked to have budget estimates ready with possible cuts listed, for the board meeting April 29. Dr. Kerr said he had prepared estimates which showed where cuts could be made most easily, where, if necessary, they board had considered the matter of consolidation since last May. It now has the federal survey, the institutional briefs and two messages from the governor, and should be able to shape out a decision soon, he indicated.

Meeting April 29—At the next meeting of the board in Portland on April 29, the whole reorganization scheme will again be taken up. The board anticipated it would need to meet more than one day. In the meantime, board members will be studying the reports of the presidents.

These reports, incidentally, are voluminous, and together with the federal survey give the board plenty of reading matter for the next few days.

Governor Meier, in his address to the board at Salem, did not offer any definite reorganization scheme as some had expected. He warned the board of the necessity of drastic economy, drew attention to the advantages of consolidation and the need for a business administration, and left it for the board to decide what to do.

PRISON HEARING STORY

and say he is not responsible for any events at the penitentiary during this hearing, but if there should be bloodshed, the governor alone is responsible, and he knows it." Carson charged the governor, "The governor is playing with dynamite in directing his activities to the penitentiary. The penitentiary has been a matter of contention brought before every governor by disgruntled employees, and Meier is the first to succumb."

Testimony Hearings—Carson summarized the testimony which he declared all hearsay. "No court in the land would confirm a man on hearsay testimony. No evidence has been presented and for this reason our arguments will be short." Carson read letters of commendation received by Meyers, and also quoted one Meyers wrote to the governor before he took office in which he suggested the merit system and need of a parole officer, which suggestions, he said, were adopted by the governor. "These do not sound like the prattling of an incompetent man," Carson added.

The defense brought out the record made at the penitentiary as to economic buildings and to control of the prisoners. He cited that since 1924 the population had increased about 50 per cent. Yet the number of escapes during the past four years was 12, as compared with the four-year record prior to Meyers' when 90 prisoners escaped. During the previous four years 81 of these had been returned. While under Meyers' four more had been returned than had escaped, the additional ones being out since earlier dates.

Thorney Veatch, in concluding his arguments, stated there were only two points which he wished to emphasize before the board: control one the matter of borrowing $100,000 by prison authorities for the flax industry, which he declared an offense subject to penitentiary sentence. The other he declared the use of convict and state property for a private en-
