TODAY'S RECIPES

By SISTER MARY

SCIENTISTS have been studying and investigating the food properties of strawberries quite thoroughly and extensively during the past few years with the result that we may feel a certain amount of virtue as well as pleasure in consuming quantities of the luscious fruit.

According to the reports of these investigations, strawberries are remarkably good mineral substitutes for oranges. Although slightly lower in lime, they are four times higher in iron content per unit of weight than oranges. The lime content is of comparative little importance since milk is the cheapest source of this mineral constituent. It takes ten large oranges to furnish the same amount of lime or calcium found in one quart of milk.

In many respects, strawberries and oranges parallel each other in food values. Strawberries are richer in protein than oranges, but a pound of berries, which is about a quart as purchased, supplies approximately the same number of calories as a pound of oranges.

Vitamin C Abundant

It is also interesting to know that vitamin C, the so-called preservative, is abundant in berries as it does in oranges. Vitamins A and B, the growing and building substances, are lower in berries than in the citrus fruit. The strawberry holds only half the A value and one-third the B value of the orange.

Can't PLAY Can't REST

—child needs Castoria

effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child. All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

ence of air has little effect. This explains why commercially canned berries retain vitamin C.

There is also good reason to believe that berries like the other fruits actually help the body to make use of other elements in the diet. They are not only valuable in themselves, but they increase the value of accompanying foods in daily meals.

Naturally, if you want to use strawberries as a substitute for oranges and gain the same effect, the berries must be perfectly ripe and not deluged with sugar. Keep in mind, too, that oranges have been found experimentally to be very efficient in reducing body acidity while we are still in the dark regarding strawberries on this point.

Many housewives must face the problem of buying fruit and canning it, or buying the commercially canned product. If a comparatively high price must be paid for fresh berries plus labor, fuel and equipment it may be found much cheaper to invest in the commercially canned product. Of course the woman who lives in a small town or in a community easily accessible to berry markets may find it profitable to do her own canning.

Oakridge Grade Athletes Honored

OAKRIDGE, May 20. (Special) —Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dolmeyer and Miss Frances Custer were hosts at a banquet given in honor of the two athletic teams of the grade school. The affair was given in the legion hall Monday evening at six-thirty o'clock. The table was attractive with its color scheme of red and silver, the school colors. Each place was marked with a small paper name and with the initials O. G. S. on them. Assisting Mrs. Dolmeyer with the serving were Mrs. Lauren Gale and Mrs. Charles Croner.

Short talks were given by Harry Cameron of Westfir, Miss Custer, G. B. McFarland and Mr. Dolmeyer. W. B. Yates presented the students with their letters. Special guests for the banquet were Mr. Cameron, C. B. McFarland, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Walker, Mr. W. B. Yates, Mr. J. E. Paddock. YOUR CHILDREN

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

DOES there happen to be in the family one child that is very, very good and one that is very, very bad?

Does it happen that Billy is as clean as new wheat, as polite as a salesman, as quiet and generous as a saint, while Jack is everything the reverse?

Well, now—let's look. First at Billy. Why is he so good? I think we will rob him of his halo for a little while and suspect him of the worst. Of course this probably is not your Billy, but I have known some like this, and anyway we are just supposing.

Billy came into this world first. He had no sisters or brothers toward whom he had to develop any relations. His world consisted of three people, with himself in the center.

He grew for two or three years, alone, in a complete atmosphere of self-satisfaction. He just knew he was good. He needed to resort to no subterfuge to get attention and praise. It was there, his without earning.

Then—the Newcomer
One day along came the pink bundle—that ominous package of fate that upset the whole apple cart of an only child. I feel sorry for those poor little tykes who suddenly feel themselves out in the cold, but not all of them need too much sympathy because, as in Billy's case, some are instantly antagonistic and proceed to build around themselves a perfect network of defense, or rather, plan of attack.

Being older, they naturally are used to get attention and praise. It was there, his without earning.

A More Complex Sphere
But Billy came into a more complicated world. There were four in his, his playing left center. The two ends were kind and loving, but there was something about that other that was puzzling and not quite friendly. Gradually he established a reciprocal feeling of resentment and defiance.

Besides, Billy was always being held up to him: "See how nice and clean Billy is!" "See Billy do it!" "Try to be like Billy!"

"Never saw such suds!" says Mrs. K. Wilkins, 162 E. 16th St. "I'll never forget the first time I used Rinsoln my washer. Everything came out so white and clean. All my clothes had a better color. I've tried many laundry soaps, but never saw such creamy suds as Rinsoln gives. I use Rinsoln for all cleaning. It's wonderful for dishwashing." MRS.
