WIFE, CHILD GIVEN RIGHT TO NEW NAME

A criminal record of the husband resulted Tuesday in the change of name for his wife and their child, by order of Circuit Judge G. F. Skipworth.

M. Fay Arnold brought the suit against Clarence A. Arnold. She stated the pair married at Chicago on Aug. 10, 1927, and that some time later the plaintiff learned the name of the father of her husband was Perry instead of Arnold. She claimed the younger man had never legally had the name changed.

The defendant, she said, was later indicted in Michigan for impersonating an officer, and spent some time in Leavenworth penitentiary. Later, he did a year in California for forgery.

The plaintiff asked and received an annulment, and the right to use the name Perry for herself and minor child. She stated she wished to be freed from any connection with the name Arnold in view of the criminal record.

Pair Get $50 Fine For Stealing Steer

Francis Woods and Antone Schuessler, who shot a steer belonging to someone else and butchered it for meat, were sentenced to pay fines of $50 each when they appeared before Circuit Judge George F. Skipworth Tuesday morning.

Judge Skipworth could have sentenced the pair to state's prison for from two to five years. He said however, it was their first offense, they shot the animal because they were hungry, and he thought leniency was justified. They will lay out their fine in the county jail.

Lookout Point In Siuslaw Is Reached by Car

An automobile road which gives access to a forest lookout station is being built this summer by the Siuslaw national forest, according to Supervisor R. S. Shelley.

This road is known as the Three Rivers project, and leads to the summit of Mt. Hebo, in the Tillamook country, on the divide between the Yamhill and Nestucca rivers.

Because forest lookouts are usually reached by steep and rocky trains, public interest in the Hebo project has been great and on Sundays when the road is opened travel to the summit has been extensive.

The road has now been extended to the summit this summer. It is open only on Sundays.

VICTIM OF GUN TO GET $150 DAMAGES

A personal injury claim growing out of the shooting of Ruby Gleaser, a minor, by Bruce Frazee, another minor, has been compromised through agreement of the parents, according to a statement filed in circuit court Tuesday.

The statement, in the shape of a request that the court grant the right to compromise the claim, cited that the action grew out of a shooting episode, in which Bruce Frazee, son of Fred Frazee, and a minor, used a .22 calibre rifle. No other circumstances were recited.

Fred Frazee, the statement said, had agreed to pay $150 in settlement in the personal injury claim. This was held satisfactory to May Gleaser, acting as guardian for the victim of the gun.

Guard Company to Receive Pay Checks

Quarterly pay checks have been received from national guard headquarters in Salem by the local companies. Those for Company C will be distributed to the men at the regular drill Tuesday night.

Attendance for the local units is maintaining a high average despite the number of men out of town for work and the hot weather, according to the unit commanders, Major Delbert C. Stanard and Captains James A. Meek and J. C. Koepke. Company C has had an average of about 50 men present at each of the drills since the return from camp a month ago.
