YOUR CHILDREN

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

Do you know that many, many children worry because they think they are bad?

I don't know how we first got the idea that about half the things we do are wicked, but children have the idea of discipline so strongly impressed on them that this is possibly the reason that we have grown up that way. We began by feeling that almost any natural impulse is wrong.

Children have no sense of proportion and when they are told repeatedly day in and day out that they are bad, they don't know just what we mean and jump to the conclusion that they are worse than they really are.

Perhaps Tommy has disobeyed orders and gone down to see a smash-up or a fire. In our anxiety to impress on him the danger of crowds in traffic, we go for him right, tell him all sorts of things out of proportion to his case.

Enemies of Obedience

His crime consisted first of all of disobedience, but remember that curiosity and impulse are natural forces under which obedience often falls. To disobey was wrong but not criminal in our excitement, or cruel to worry us, so, good-for-nothing, or even wicked.

Perhaps he didn't go to a fire but merely broke a dish or got his shoes muddy, or lost his book. Our own bad humor and our own hysterical emotions cause an outburst absolutely unwarranted by the occasion. Tommy is left again with the idea that he is a worthless young scamp. And if the performance is repeated day after day, it is easy to imagine just what his opinion of himself is going to be, for children take us literally—how can they guess that we are only letting off steam and do not mean half of what we say?

Words Take Effect

Words sink in and eventually leave their mark. In time, of course, Tommy gets hardened, but that does not lessen his idea that he is just saving his face, it is largely because of this notion that he does get hardened.

When a child is thoroughly saturated with the idea of his worthlessness, he loses all ambition to be honorable. Perhaps he feels that he may as well have the same as the name, or perhaps it is because all the finer feelings dry up when self respect is gone, or he may just feel that it is useless to try to be good because he gets blamed no matter what happens.

Holmes-Beistel Wedding Is Sunday

The marriage of Miss Margaret Arline Beistel, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Frank Beistel, to Allan Russell Holmes of Tacoma was solemnized Sunday afternoon at a pretty ceremony held in the United Lutheran church at four o'clock.

Miss Grace Heistel, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and wore light blue georgette and lace and carried a bouquet of gladioli.

R. D. Holmes of Seattle was best man. Henry and Arthur Beistel, brother of the bride, were ushers.

For the wedding music, R. D. Holmes sang and Mrs. Phil Nordling played the march.

Mr. and Mrs. Holmes have gone to Chicago, St. Paul, and Milwaukee, by way of Victoria and Vancouver, B. C., planning to return to make their home in Tacoma. Mrs. Holmes is a graduate of the University of Oregon and has been active in music, being organist at the United Lutheran church for several years and having been accompanist for the glee club on the campus.
