TODAY'S RECIPES

By SISTER MARY

A BRIDE'S first experience in canning is one of her thrilling housekeeping adventures. Although modern methods have come to the rescue regarding measurements and time for cooking, the first hours spent in a spic and span kitchen "putting up" fruits and jellies are not without their moments of anxiety.

Successful canning depends on the principle of sterilization. Food which has been made sterile must be kept so and the efficiency of these processes is the answer to the canning problem.

In addition to the necessity of a temperature which will kill germs and complete sealing to keep out germ-laden air, several other factors must be considered in the work of canning.

Canning does not in any way improve the quality of the product canned. Fruits and vegetables which were old and tasteless before canning will be just that way after canning. Produce which is bruised or specked has begun to be attacked by bacteria which is not destroyed in the sterilization of canning. Consequently, only sound, fresh materials should be canned.

Certain fruits and vegetables are easily canned on account of their high acid content. High temperature increases the purifying action of the acid of strawberries, currants, pineapples and tomatoes and makes it possible to sterilize them quickly. In extremely acid fruits, the acid plus exclusion of air is sufficient preservative without sterilization.

Acid May Be Added

Vegetables which contain no acid are difficult to can in the home kitchen unless a steam pressure cooker is used. The sterilization or processing period must be carried on for several hours. However, it has been found that the addition of a little acid will overcome this difficulty without affecting the flavors of the canned product. From one to two teaspoons lemon juice added to each pint of asparagus, string beans, peas, greens and corn reduces the time of processing and insures against spoilage. Corn requires two teaspoons lemon juice. This gives a slightly acid flavor when the jar is opened for serving, but one-eighth teaspoon soda added with the seasoning when the vegetable is reheated neutralizes the acid most satisfactorily.

A short pre-cooking period before packing in cans is a decided advantage. In this way the center of the filled jar reaches the processing temperature from 30 to 40 minutes sooner than when vegetables are packed cold.

Fruits and vegetables canned in glass should be stored in a dark place. Light will cause the foods to lose their color, which of course detracts from their appearance when served. The temperature at which canned vegetables are stored is also important since it has a pronounced effect on the keeping qualities. Store them in as cool a place as possible, preferably between 45 and 60 degrees F.

Sterilize all jars, rubbers and tops before packing with any product. To sterilize place jars and tops in a dish pan or large kettle. Cover with cold water and bring slowly to the boiling point. Boil fifteen minutes. Add rubbers for last five minutes of boiling period and let them remain in the hot water for ten minutes longer. If screw-top glass jars are used remove covers and place them open side up in bottom of dish pan. Put jars on their sides over them. This lifts the glass from the direct heat at the bottom of the pan and prevents breakage. If clamptop jars are used remove covers and place on edge between cans. The metal of the clamp-top lifts these jars enough to prevent breaking. Remove cans from the boiling water as they are needed for filling.

Adjust rubbers on cans before packing. Pack loosely to within one-half inch of top. Half-seal and plunge into canner containing boiling water deep enough to cover the tops of the jars at least two inches.

"Buzzard's Roost" Topic of "Cowboy"

Jack Winsett, the "cowboy preacher," will speak on "The Buzzard's Roost" at the tent meeting at the corner of Eighth avenue west and Madison street Tuesday night at 7:45 o'clock.

Monday night he told his large audience about his trip to the Garden of Gethsemane. He said: "A most solemn feeling came over me as I knelt there in the garden by the tree where the Lord Jesus Christ knelt the night He prayed in such great agony of soul, that he sweat great drops of blood for the lost world. I realized that He potentially died there for me. He suffered far greater agony in the garden than He did on Calvary, for He could not get away from the agony of soul, as He did from the agony of physical torture on the cross when He dismissed his spirit and died. He has done this all for us, what have we done for Him?"

He also showed the moving pictures of the garden and the Bible lands, which he took himself, having traveled all over that country.

YOUR CHILDREN

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

I WAS in congress one day when a representative from the West introduced a bill about grasshoppers. They are destroying crops everywhere and the government's aid is needed to exterminate them.

There are other insects that are enemies of mankind in a different way, that spread disease among people—namely, the innocent fly and mosquito.

The government has done wonders in the tropics in keeping down mosquitoes, carriers of deadly tropical fevers. Our northern ones are supposed to be less deadly, I do not know. All insects are strange things. Some of the obscure and most fatal of diseases whose cause has never been discovered many some day be traced to mosquitoes.

Since last summer, I look doubtfully at the picture of safety we have drawn. A member of our family was ill at the point of death for months with a tropical fever that had undoubtedly been transmitted by the bite or sting of an insect. And he had not been anywhere near the tropics. He had been, however, to a camp.

Flies are Perilous

We know that flies—or suppose so—do not have this power, but we also know that a fly crawling over filth or coming out of a sick room, can carry infection on its feet. If we were to examine each fly with a microscope we should find almost everything there, I am sure. It would not be a pretty picture.

The baby gets sick and we cannot imagine how it happened; we are so careful of his bottles and nipples and milk. Each thing boiled and covered and kept in a clean cold refrigerator.

No one ever thinks of the one window that lost its screen, or the other one with a big hole in it. No one bothers with a swatter when the kitchen door, opened and closed every few minutes, lets in a new batch of intruders. A few flies more or less, a mosquito or two, what do they matter? Just little bugs that don't bother anybody, except that the mosquitoes make the children scratch. In some places mosquitoes are as common as flies.

Fight for Safety

The natives say you get "immune" to them by and by, and laugh if you are fussy. After last summer I have had time to think that over.

There is only one way to be safe and that is to war on any or all insects that are around. This is the time of year to do it. A fly killed now means something like a million less by August. Mosquitoes the same.

Don't leave poisoned paper about where children can get it, but take any and every means of overcoming these pests in your home and neighborhood. Little ponds or pools that breed mosquitoes should be covered with a thin layer of oil. It kills the eggs, for the eggs hatch on water.

Wrap every bit of garbage in paper if your lifting company does not object (and they shouldn't) before it goes into the can. Then put a newspaper over the top before the lid goes on. That makes it fit tighter. Don't allow any garbage or crumbs or sugar or fruit to lie in the kitchen. They invariably draw flies.

If you have no screens, netting tacked on the windows does very well. Baby carriages should be covered with mosquito netting when outdoors.

Pacificism is misplaced when it comes to life-destroying insects of any kind. Let us all join in a big campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Wilson, 1309 Columbia Street, Eugene, Oregon, is the winner. His prize winning name was Williams Half and Half Bread. It arrived shortly after the contest was announced. Post-dated but a few hours later, came the same name from Clifford Collins, Roseburg, Oregon.

Hundreds of others sent in suggestions, many of them similar to the prize-winning name.

So, Williams Half and Half is the name of Eugene's newest loaf. It is the same Milk Maid bread you like. Half the loaf is white bread, the other half is dark bread. Now, you don't have to buy two loaves, because part of the family prefers white, while the others ask for dark. Fresh at your grocer's daily.
