Dance Recital Is Major Event Of Past Week

THE outstanding social event of the past week was the benefit dance recital presented by Bessie Schoenberg, under the auspices of the Business and Professional Women's club Thursday evening in the palm room of the Osburn hotel. Miss Schoenberg has been studying the modern dance in New York city for the past three years, under Martha Graham, one of the great teachers of the modern dance. She was ably assisted by Aurora Potter Underwood, pianist and accompanist, and Alberta Potter, violinist.

Miss Schoenberg has been visiting her mother, Mme. Rose McGrew, and returns this week-end to New York to resume her study of the dance.

As an introduction to her presentation, Miss Schoenberg gave a brief sketch of the modern dance as an expression of the age, just as much as is modern painting, modern music and modern literature.

"The modern dance became a vital movement after the world war, and made itself particularly felt in Germany. Creative dancers living at that time and in that country, could not be satisfied with artificial prettiness or mere grace. Perhaps these first beginnings of what we today call modern dance, were harsh, grotesque, bizarre; but life in those post war times was just that."

Isadora Duncan, first of all the great American dancers, was a pioneer of the modern dance before the war and did much to revolutionize the dance of her period. She was the first dancer to appear on the stage bare-footed — a tremendous achievement at that time. Ruth St. Denis was also mentioned as belonging to the forerunners of the modern dance. The great exponents today are Mary Wigman, Martha Graham, Doris Humphrey, Charles Weidman and Harold Kreuzberg.

"The modern dance is an independent art form, independent even of music and when music is used plays a secondary part. It is, like all the contemporary arts, a thing which must be seen again and again to be understood—it should have everything, be dramatic, or lyric or humorous, but it should always remain a dance. It should be an expression of human emotions or phases of life purely in movement of the body and not be pantomime though it may apply pantomime if wanted."

Miss Schoenberg opened with a "March" by Bela Bartok, a stark number, a bit barbaric with a feeling of arrogance of victory. As a contrast the next number was a "Lyric" by Debussy, almost emotionless with a round soft movement with the feeling of a lyric poem by Shelley or Keats.

A third group included three folk dances with a touch of satirical humor, peasant-like, colorful and gay.

"Choral" by Bach combined the strength of a religious belief, a bit of Christianity, and churchliness with the stark strength of the Bach music. "Lullaby" by Frescobaldi portrayed a madonna with her child in the manner of the Flemish virgins of the pre-Renaissance period.

The sixth number was "Lament" by Scriapine, a picture of the emotional, ever lamenting Jewish women of the ghetto.

The closing number was a "Waltz" by Debussy incorparting the stiffness and artificiality of the court dance, the abandon of the waltz of Vienna and the charming sentimentality always connected with the word waltz.

Mrs. Underwood played three piano solos, "Passa caglia" by Cyrill Scott; "Waltz Op. 64 No. 3" by Chopin and "March Wind" by MacDowell. Two violin solos, "Praludium Allegro" by Pugnani-Kreisler and "Andante from Symphoni Espagnole" by Lalo, were played by Miss Potter, accompanied by Mrs. Underwood.

The costumes for the dance were designed and executed by Bessie Schoenberg.

A reception followed the recital in the ball room.

Big sable sleeves that are patterned along dolman lines are so effective that no other trimming is needed. The line of the sable follows the body line of the back of the coat. The front of the coat is cut on the same pattern without the fur. At left is a pink taffeta evening frock, also by Gordan, with a rich wine-velvet stand-up collar. The collar twists and turns at the front neck and the back waist, finally ending in the front, where a huge rhinestone buckle adds a shining touch.

Bill Klem, veteran National league umpire, is generally credited with having originated the semaphore system of informing the spectators as to his decisions on various plays of the game.

A FAIR WARNING

The little showers that we have been having are just gentle warnings that it is time to have your roof reshingled before the winter rains set in.

Call 85 and let us send a man out to give you a price on putting your roof in shape whether it needs new shingles or just a little patching.

Don't wait for another warning. You may wake up some morning and find that you waited too long. DO IT NOW.
