DISARMAMENT, BIGGER NAVIES!

ONE of the perverse signs of the times is the fact that the 1932 edition of "Jane's Fighting Ships," just published in London, contains more pages and more photographs than any edition printed in many years.

"Jane's Fighting Ships" is a compendium of the world's navies. It contains a picture and a complete description of just about every warship in existence, documented with painstaking care. And at the close of a year in which naval disarmament has been discussed in every world capital without ceasing, this book finds that there are more warships to write about than ever.

This, perhaps, convinces a lot of diplomats of giving more lip-service to a cause in which they do not really believe. But it serves also to illustrate the painful fix in which the world as a whole finds itself these days.

The world wants peace very badly; it is still groggy from the effects of the last war, and it most devoutly hopes that some way can be found of settling international disputes without fighting. But because the realities of world politics look more ominous than they have in years, and because no one is quite ready to believe that there exist in the world enough intelligence and good will to get around all of the sharp corners peaceably, nobody dares to go ahead and disarm. The world goes on building warships, and the editors of "Jane's Fighting Ships" bring out the fattest edition in many years.

Those of us who listen uneasily to all of the rumors of wars can only be comforted by the fact that these expert editors give high praise to the new American 10,000-ton "treaty" cruisers.

Earlier editions had criticized these ships; they were too lightly armored, they rolled excessively, they vibrated too much, they made poor gun platforms. Now, however, it is reported that alterations have removed the objections and that the ships are extremely capable. We are, it seems, ready for a fuss.

But what a commentary the whole thing is on the half-hearted way in which we have pushed all of our fine disarmament projects! Instead of getting results, we have only a fat new book—and the assurance that the ships we are forced to build are, after all, better than had been supposed.

THE "SUB" LEARNS TO WALK

WHEN Simon Lake sent his new "baby submarine" to the bottom of Long Island Sound a few days ago and proved that the tiny craft might have some real commercial and scientific uses, he took a step that has been awaited ever since the first submarine took its first trip.

The submarine, beyond question, is one of the most ingenious mechanical devices of modern days. It makes reality of a very old dream—the dream of sailing the seas in a boat that could dive under water whenever its skipper felt like it. But so far it has had only one use; it has had to be a warship or nothing.

Jules Verne, of course, forecast other uses for such craft. His Captain Nemo had a submarine that was a kind of yacht, and in it he made long trips and had a great deal of fun. But so far no submarine has lived up to that romantic forecast. As a means of destruction the submarine is an exceedingly effective instrument; no one, however, has ever been able to put it to work in any other field.

Not long ago there was an attempt to use a submarine for Arctic exploration. But the results weren't as startling as they might have been. At the end the submarine remained what it had been before—a fighter, and nothing more.

Now, however, Mr. Lake is trying to convert the craft to peace-time uses. His "baby sub" crawls along the bottom of the sea, emits divers through special hatches, extends mechanical arms and what-not to pluck sponges from the rocks, dig up oysters and clams from their beds, and so on, and permits naturalists to study the ocean bottom and collect specimens from it with ease and comfort; and it is not hard to hope that the contrivance lives up to its inventor's claims for its scientific and commercial usefulness.

For it is, in a way, something of an indictment of our society, this fact that we can devise a marvel like a submarine and then use it only to send other ships to the bottom of the sea. If we are as intelligent as we like to believe, we shall find less destructive uses for it eventually. And this looks like a promising beginning.

A NEW FRONTIER

NOBODY knows how much land has been taken back by the states for taxes from its former owners. But some indication may be had from the fact that South Dakota recently sent more than 5,000,000 acres under the auctioneer's hammer. It is estimated that 20 per cent of the state's total agricultural acreage will be removed from the tax lists when the counties take title.

There's a problem for you! We have grown accustomed to the thought that public lands were exhausted. Are we to have great areas of public lands again? If so, what are we going to do with them? A way must be found to dovetail this new factor into the unemployment situation. Can the states re-sell this land on long-time payments and easy terms to workers forced out of city jobs by the rise of machinery? Oregon has its share of this problem. Here is a chance for some pioneering in state legislatures this winter.

HURRAHS FOR THE FUGITIVE

THE sympathy which so many people extended to Robert Elliott Burns, the Georgia prison fugitive whom New Jersey's governor refused to send back to Georgia, undoubtedly was due not so much to the man's story of injustice and brutality as to the age-old impulse to extend good wishes to any man who is fleeing from the law.

That impulse dates away back in the history of civilization. Automatically, without inquiring into the justice or otherwise of the case, we have a queer fellow-feeling for any chap who is running away from restraint. We have a sneaking hope that he gets clear away, and we don't often bother to find out whether he is fit to be at large.

Burns had got away, made a useful citizen of himself, been recaptured, escaped again and established himself once more. That a great many people were glad when Governor Moore refused to send him back does not necessarily mean that the nation as a whole is aroused about the condition of Georgia's penal system.

THE "LAME DUCK" SPECTACLE

IF an all-wise providence had tried to give the American people a direct object-lesson concerning the necessity of eliminating "lame ducks" from their government, it could hardly have devised a better one than we have been witnessing in Washington recently.

In the first place, we have had a hold-over Congress floundering desperately in an effort to straighten out the prohibition issue—a job which is important and pressing, but which surely is the province of the men who were chosen at the last election.

Secondly, we have the dismaying muddle over the war debts. The president and the president-elect cannot agree, and the most vital part of our foreign relations program must mark time for several months.

Basically, these troubles are the fault of the system and not of the men involved. And luckily we have a chance, in the pending "lame duck" amendment, to bring the system up to date.

Yes, preventive medicine is engaging an increasing amount of this profession's attention. But it was only a coincidence, of course, that a nationally famous clinic announced it was making a study of hiccups at the moment Congress pondered a beer bill.

The United States will grow a new crop of industrial giants as result of the depression, predicts the president of Rotary International. There, little bankrupt, don't you cry; you'll be a magnate, by and by.

The era of the $50,000 extravaganzas is ending, observes a Broadway character who produced them. He should stroll into legislative halls in most any state and get new inspiration.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

THE ASTORIA BRIDGE

(Salem Capital Journal)

THE Reconstruction Finance corporation has set a hearing for the application made to it for a loan of $500,000 to the Rivers Improvement corporation for the construction of a toll bridge across the Columbia river at Astoria.

The project is urged as a "self-liquidating" project, but if the experience of the Longview bridge is repeated, and there is every indication it will be, it will take many generations to liquidate it, for the traffic is not in sight. If the bridge connected two populous areas, it might furnish sufficient revenue, but it connects two sparsely settled regions and the only traffic would be that of tourists—and tourist traffic is annually decreasing.

If Astoria can get Uncle Sam to build a $500,000 bridge, it will be a life-saver for Astoria. If not for Uncle Sam who holds the sack. However it costs nothing to make the effort. So let Astoria grab while the grabbing is good.

IGNORANT VOTERS

(Cottage Grove Sentinel)

THE Eugene Register-Guard complains that there are thousands of persons who have written the deceased Teddy Roosevelt, his letters having been received by his widow, congratulating him upon his reelection to the presidency and that many are already addressing President-elect Roosevelt at the White House.

The Register-Guard believes these people do not read the newspapers and is very much discouraged. If the Register-Guard read the newspapers it would know that any of the common run who are writing to congratulate the president-elect, or who believe they have business with the president, haven't intelligence enough to read a newspaper, not to mention an informative newspaper like the R-G. No one in the Cottage Grove territory, covered by The Sentinel, has made either of the errors that have so perturbed the R-G.

MR. BECK GIVES A VIEW

MAPLETON, Ore.—(To the Editor.)—It all depends on how you look at it. If a certain individual was elected as a county official and during his term of office he had the cooperation of the people, the lawyers and the press, if then appears that he had an excellent chance to make good and be re-elected, but alas, at the election his opponent beat him by about 5000 votes. The question now arises, has this said individual any reason now to pat himself on the back and say, "Oh, you great servant, I can now retire with great honor, and rest on my laurels." I know if it had been me, I would look back over the situation and say to myself, "It must be that the people have found me out and oh, what an infernal ASS I was for running again, but I didn't have any better judgment." Well, maybe nobody accused him of being a judge anyhow.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

STUDIES on hypersensitivity of the body of certain substances, for example, the kind of sensitivity that is associated with hay fever and asthma, revealed in 1932 that there may be sensitivity to physical changes, perhaps the results of chemical changes in the tissue brought about by the action of such physical factors as heat, cold, ordinary light, ultraviolet, X-ray or similar factors.

Moreover, the chemists have been working at the subject with a view to finding out whether or not there is any specific chemical substance which may be the exciting agent in such attacks.

While their work is yet in an extremely early stage, it seems likely that they may yet determine some specific chemical change related to the allergic attack.

The mechanism by which these reactions are brought about is an extremely complicated one in which perhaps various tissues and organs in the human body may take part.

The medical profession has also given special attention to the effects of certain glandular changes on the body as a whole. It is found that such glands as the pituitary or the parathyroid may not only undersecrete but also oversecrete, and that in such cases it is necessary to control the condition either by giving the extract of the gland in deficiency or by removing portions or all of the glands surgically when there is excess.

Particularly has the profession been concerned with the control of cancer. Advances have not been made which would warrant the belief that any specific substance has been discovered that is of value.

The correct procedure continues to be early diagnosis with surgical removal, if possible, and with the use of radium and high voltage X-ray. There seems to be some evidence that primary cancer of the lungs is increasing in amount, perhaps associated with some change in our methods of living.

Means have been developed not only for applying tests of the excretion of the body for determining whether or not a woman was to give birth to a child, but also by a modification of the test to determine after the fifth month, the sex of the prospective child.

John Prepares The Way

Text: Mark 1:1-11. The International uniform Sunday school lesson for Jan. 1.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
 (Editor of The Congregationalist)

THE lessons of the first quarter of the new year deal with the Gospel of the Son of God, with lesson materials taken from the Gospel of Mark, which is the simplest and, as many scholars believe, the earliest form of the Gospel record.

The Gospel of Mark plunges immediately into the story of the life and ministry of Jesus without any preliminary history as in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, and without any philosophical prologue as in the Gospel of John. The Gospel of Mark is characterized throughout by the simplicity and directness of the record. There are no unnecessary words; there is little reference to detail or event, except as these have to do with the main fact of the ministry of Jesus and the Gospel that he brought to men.

To have plunged into the description of the ministry of Jesus without any reference to the preparatory work of John would however, have been almost impossible. John's work of preparation was so directly associated with the coming of Jesus and the early disciples who gathered around the Master were so under the influence of John, that the work of preparation was in reality a part of the ministry itself.

There is no nobler word concerning John the Baptist than the word of Jesus himself. When he described John as the greatest of those who had been born of woman, he spoke in a worthy way of one of the truly great figures of history.

But it must not be forgotten that he spoke of John, none the less, as upon a plane of privilege and achievement less than that of the Kingdom of Heaven which he opened up to the
