heralded argument of a few years ago that government could not be entrusted to manage public utilities on account of its incompetency and political corruption.

"Since the holding company problem is national in its scope, I respectfully recommend that this legislature memorialize congress for the immediate enactment of appropriate legislation on the subject.

"I also renew my recommendation for legislation vesting the public utility commission with power to supervise and control utility stocks, bonds, obligations, mergers, consolidations, purchases and sales of properties so that citizens holding utility securities may be protected from further spoliation.

"It is further recommended that the public utilities commissioner be given power to regulate and supervise the annual budget of expenditures of public utilities.

"It is further recommended that the public utilities commissioner be given jurisdiction over contracts and other transactions arising between a utility and the parent company, or any affiliated company.

"It is further recommended that provision be made by law for the recapture of excess earnings and that the payment of service fees to a holding company by a utility on a percentage basis of the gross revenue be prohibited.

"It is further recommended that you give favorable consideration to legislation confining as far as possible the carrying on of public utility business within the state to corporations organized under the laws of Oregon, and to legislation assessing the public utilities commissioner against the expense of investigations by the public utility commissioner against the utility investigated. Similar laws are in force in California and Wisconsin and their operation has been found very satisfactory.

JOBLESS GROUPS STORY

Salt Lake alone depend on it, getting their living by their own labor instead of from charity. The business turnover of the Salt Lake activities represents about $600,000 a day—if figured in money values.

Beyond Salt Lake the N. D. A. spreads among the farmers. Farmers swap sheep for coal, jobless N. D. A. members shear the sheep, make clothing of the wool, butcher the carcasses for food, tan the hides in their own tannery. So it is with many other forms of exchange.

Removing the Cause

Behind all this lies Stranahan's idea, which visions a rather Utopian, idealistic and moneyless existence of the unemployed that he calls "Natural Government." He began in August, 1931, in a small way by sending jobless men to harvest crops for farmers in return for potatoes, butter, eggs, etc. In January, 1932, he formed his Natural Development Association to expand his system of exchange and barter toward "big business."

In Minneapolis, Rev. Mecklenburg saw his "church"—one of the city's largest—breaking down under the load of mounting relief demands. Faced by this predicament he founded a unique cooperative society known as "Organized Unemployed, Inc.," which now serves 1500 persons daily, not including dependents, while upwards of 1000 families have availed themselves of its services.

Typical of the movement, Rev. Mecklenburg began by supplying barter labor to farmers near Minneapolis. Farmers paid for the labor with surplus crops, which were turned over to the organization. In this way the workers got enough cabbage to put up 600 barrels of kraut; enough fruits and vegetables for 10,000 cans of foodstuff. Also, the workers painted and repaired numerous farm buildings and repaired 14 churches.

In an abandoned school building donated by the Minneapolis board of education, the Organized Unemployed is growing rapidly. It has a huge storehouse for food, a "department store" where many articles can be obtained for scrip, a clothing factory, a shoe repair shop, a restaurant that serves 1500 meals a day and in which a good meal can be had for a dime. The outfit also operates a boarding hotel, and a series of woodcutting camps just outside the city where 1000 men are cutting timber for use as fuel in the homes of unemployed.

In Omaha, one of the city's biggest depression-time businesses is the Unemployed Married Men's Council, founded by Jobless Railroaders Redding with the assistance of Mrs. Redding. A three-story school building, a block long, is filled with offices, shops and store rooms and hundreds of men are being kept busy.

It all began when Redding gathered a group of other jobless men around him and tried to obtain a contract for building a city sewer. Redding failed, but went on organizing.

Soon the group became so large that civic leaders took notice. Permission was obtained for the council to occupy a schoolhouse that was standing idle. There an employment office was opened. The old domestic science kitchen was turned into a cafeteria. The old manual training department became a workshop.

Man Arrested On Disorderly Count

O. O. Fletcher, Eugene, was arrested by city police Sunday night after police had gone to his apartment at 88 Tenth avenue west to investigate complaints of disorderly conduct. At the apartment they were told Fletcher had come home intoxicated and threatened his wife and mother with a gun.

When he appeared in police court Monday afternoon, he was sentenced to 15 days in jail.

Police found the gun, unloaded, under his pillow and took it back to headquarters, telling him he could call for it Tuesday. Fletcher decided not to wait that long, however, and showed up at police headquarters at midnight when he proceeded to inform the officers present just what he thought of them in no uncertain terms.

Officers then arrested him and he spent the remainder of the night in the city jail.

Public acclaim which greeted the teaming of Loretta Young with George Brent, two of Hollywood's most popular stars, in "Week-End Marriage," prompted First National to team them again in their most recent picture, "They Call It Sin," which continues until Tuesday at the Heilig. The story, based on the Alberta Stedman Egan novel, is laid in ultra-modern New York where love and marriage are sought in the hectic whirl of life behind the scenes of musical shows, night clubs and pent house parties. The cast includes Una Merkel, Helen Vinson (there's a gall), David Manners, Louis Calhern and others.

The movie industry kids itself unmercifully in "Once in a Lifetime," which ends Monday at the Colonial. This satire on fantastic production methods of Hollywood studios is one continual laugh, taking the audience not only into the forbidden precincts of the sound stages during the making of a picture, but into the private offices of reputedly great executives. In this production we see an incredibly "dumb" small-time vaudeville actor installed as supervisor of a leading studio and acclaimed as the genius of Hollywood. The cast includes Jack Oakie, Sidney Fox, Aline MacMahon, Zasu Pitts, Louise, Fazenda and others.

Will Rogers, wise-cracker without portfolio to kings and commoners, is appearing for the last time Monday at the Rex in "Down to Earth." It's one of those homey, natural pictures that fits like a glove on old show. His supporting cast includes Dorothy Jordan, Irene Rich and Matty Kemp.

people out of the phone book and bestows on each of them a million dollars. Our favorite sequence—Charles Laughton's reaction to the unexpected million.

Though he is but 19 years old, Brown has appeared for a dozen years on the stage, taken part in a number of silent pictures, performed important roles in various radio programs and is now appearing on the screen in his latest talking picture, "Tom Brown of Culter." He is probably the luckiest kid in Hollywood to have his name included in the title of his first starring film. The cast includes H. B. Warner, Slim Summerville, Richard Cromwell and Zasu Pitts. Speaking of titles, don't let this one scare you away from the picture. It's a fine entertainment.
