

SEATTLE JOBLESS LEAGUE HANDLES MEMBERS AFFAIRS

... would get them—food that jobless men earned by working for farmers, clothes that jobless tailors and seamstresses made or repaired in the league's shops, shoes that jobless cobblers made or repaired.

If your landlord were clamoring for his rent, a suave committee from the league—probably composed of a lawyer, an architect and a contractor—would see him for you. Perhaps the landlord could be persuaded to let the league's workmen make repairs or improvements on the property in return for the rent; if he declined, perhaps he might be shown the danger of letting a house stand vacant when somebody might tear it down for firewood; if he still refused, perhaps there would be a gentle hint of alterations necessary to conform with the city's fire, sanitary or building ordinances.

If your water were turned off, a league committee would see the city water department for you. These city officials would be reminded that an uninterrupted water supply is essential to public health—and perhaps there might be a subtle hint of 50,000 outraged voters at the next election. Too aggressive to sit back and wait for work, the league has gone out to hunt it. Salvage of all sorts, including nails carefully extracted from old lumber, and cast-off clothing that has been remade by skilled league tailors, has proved a veritable gold mine. Old machinery, junked trucks and autos have been rebuilt for the league's transportation and manufacturing units.

Such things as the league has been unable to swap for on a large scale—gasoline, for instance—its suave committees have frankly "chiseled," for instance, pointing out to an oil company that it would be better to donate 1000 gallons of gasoline than to face higher taxes for relief.

Fun Coal Mine Denver has copied parts of the Seattle plan in its Unemployed Citizens' league of Colorado, organized by Charles D. Strong, a Denver architect. With branches in several nearby cities and towns, its supporters claim a membership of 45,000 persons, including dependents. Among other enterprises, it lists a coal mine, a wood-cutting camp, 80 trucks, and certain forms of manufacturing.

The work began last fall with the labor of jobless men on farms in return for foodstuffs. In some cases, harvesting was done on shares. All the food, fuel and clothing thus far produced has been used in direct relief, leaving nothing to be bartered. Members cooperate with the Red Cross in the distribution of flour from surplus government wheat and in the making of clothing from Red Cross cloth.

The Denver league is represented on the recently-formed mayor's committee to supervise administration of federal relief money obtained by the city.

In Houston, Texas, a band of jobless men and women who are pledged not to accept a cent of money, are earning the actual necessities, and a few of the luxuries, of life through the Unemployed Citizens' league of Houston. Each member exchanges his labor for commodities or services that accumulate to the league's "treasury" and are distributed equally.

Money forbidden Money is the one thing that Houston's jobless will not work for, and it is absolutely forbidden to figure it in any of their calculations. A laundry, a shoe shop and other enterprises are operated, and in one case, the men earned milk for their families by repairing and cleaning an alley in the rear of a large dairy.

In Waterloo, Ia., there are 2100 members of the Waterloo Unemployed Relief club, all getting their living from an organization that was built upon a potato. Last summer, when unemployed men sat idle on park benches, somebody conceived the idea of working for farmers in return for food. Trucks were borrowed, and soon 165 men were off to Illinois in a dala, Mich., where huge crops of potatoes awaited digging. The diggers earned several carloads of potatoes, onions, cabbage and other vegetables. The Rock Island railroad donated the freight. Of the cabbage, 100 hogheads were made into kraut.

Share and Share Alike The club was organized, its membership fee a dime. The simple principle of "No work, no eat" was enforced. Wood-cutting camps arose to provide fuel, a barber shop was opened, a bedding house followed, and finally a mill to grind their corn into meal.

Not long ago these men husked corn for farmers and were paid in live hogs. Jobless butchers cut up the hogs. Since a hog does not consist wholly of succulent pork chops, these unemployed men reasoned that there would be only one fair way to divide this meat, share and share alike. They ground it all into sausage.

UNION OF VETS' LAND GROUP ASKED

SALEM, Ore., Jan. 18.—(U.S.)—Consolidation of the financially unstable World War veterans' aid commission with the state land board was recommended Tuesday by Governor Meier in a special message to the legislature.

A move has been afoot to abolish the commission, but the governor hopes to carry on part of the work through consolidation and repeal of the tax of one-half mill which goes to the commission.

Since its creation in 1921 the commission issued bonds to make loans to veterans amounting to $30,500,000.

An audit was ordered by Governor Meier and three reasons attributed for the financial condition:

1—Transfers of approximately $5,000,000 in bonds to the state land board.

2—No provision made for administrative expense of the commission.

3—Increasing delinquencies and foreclosures on veterans' property.

The governor's message states that $75,000 from the sinking fund to the foreclosed upon and a delinquency of 40 per cent is expected at the end of this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Steinmetz have been in the taxi-cab business here since 1922. They have not decided what business they will follow but hope to stay in Eugene. Mr. Deitzman has been operating the Blue Line Taxi company since October 15, 1931.

Foreign Interest In Prunes Seen

PORTLAND, Jan. 18.—(AP)—A slight increasing foreign interest in prunes was apparent here this week, although domestic business continued in nominal volume with scarcely sufficient sales at the source to establish prices which were nominal and substantially the same as ruled last week. Poland and Germany appear to be the chief foreign buyers at Oregon points with sales including a number of lots of moderate size.

Lack of domestic trading is believed due to the desire of buyers to obtain further bargains but such lowering of prices is apparently not in line with holders' ideas.

Reedsport's Fire Department Praised

REEDSPORT, Jan. 18.—(Special)—John Bernhardt, chief of the local fire company, made a comprehensive report of the condition of his department to the city dials Tuesday evening, and all expressed their appreciation of the efficiency of the fire boys. He reported nine calls in 1932. The property involved was valued at $27,400, and insured at a risk of $17,600. Property destroyed was worth $12,845, and the amount of insurance paid was $7,855. The greatest loss was that of E. H. Franklin, owner of the Casino dance hall.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—(AP)—The house today tabled a resolution demanding the impeachment of President Hoover for a second time this session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—(AP)—Representative McFadden (R. Pa.), took the floor today and again moved "to impeach Herbert Hoover, president of the United States."
