JOBS—CURE FOR UNREST

SHERWOOD ANDERSON, novelist, has put in most of this year wandering around America, talking to city people, country people, men in bread-lines, hitchhikers and everybody else he could get hold of, trying to find out if there is any sign of revolution in this country.

He reports now, in The American Spectator, that there is not. And in explaining why there is not he touches on a point that most radical writers miss entirely.

The situation in America, he points out, is entirely different from the situation overseas. The people are different, the country is different, the tradition is different.

Our great age was a building age. We built cities, railroads, factories, machines; we cut down forests, dammed up rivers, tunneled through mountains, dug our out of the earth. We did not worry about theories of economics; there was a lot of work to do and we went at it feverishly, content to tackle the job at hand.

And today, says Mr. Anderson, the jobless millions are not talking about the "decline of capitalism," about socialism or communism, Marxism or any other ism. Instead, he says, they are simply saying: "Give us work! Give us work! It is this damned standing still here, doing nothing, that is taking the heart out of us."

There is, as Mr. Anderson points out, enough work left in America to keep the nation busy for a thousand years to come. What is needed now, he asserts, is "an end to all the talk of our failure as a people, and new talk of what is to be done."

Both the radical theorist looking hopefully for a spread of Marxism and the die-hard Tory quaking in his boots lest the deluge break over him miss the point completely.

The chief sufferers from the depression are not in the mood to smash things. They aren't looking ahead to riots, military rule, a dictatorship of the proletariat and so on. They simply want to go back to work. The jobs are there, potentially; houses to be built, railroads to be rehabilitated, factories to be overhauled, farms to be put in order, timber to be cut, canals to be dug, water-power to be harnessed.

It ought not to be such an impossible job to get the wheels moving.

MORGAN AND THE PUBLIC

THE investigation into the affairs of J. P. Morgan & Co. is important, not so much because of sensational disclosures which may be made as because it provides the general public with a free look into what is, in the last analysis, the public's business.

Recognition of that simple fact is one of the most wholesome developments that have come out of the new deal at Washington.

The boundary lines between private business and public business are hazy and ill-defined at all times. By tradition, of course, what a man chooses to do in his own office in pursuit of his own designs, is strictly his own concern; but in practice it doesn't quite work out that way, and the more important the man is the more does the public have a right to inquire into the things that happen in his inner sanctum.

The conditions under which all of us live and work and play are determined partly by what our elected representatives do at Washington and partly by obscure economic forces which we do not wholly understand and which we have never yet had much luck in controlling; but a third factor, which in some ways is the most important of all, is the activity of a few men of great wealth and high position—like Mr. Morgan and his partners.

Under our present system, these men are responsible to no one. In the general run of cases there is no appeal from the decisions they make. Much of the time the ordinary citizen does not even know what their decisions are; sometimes, indeed, their connections with his place in society is so involved that he doesn't even realize that the decisions they have taken will affect him.

Nevertheless, the kind of job he is able to get, the amount of money he is able to make, the price he will have to pay for what he buys, the amount of security he is able to have in his own niche—any or all of these things can be influenced profoundly by the things that such men do.

That is why it is so necessary that the public have full information about the things that go on in offices like those of Morgan & Co. In putting these kings of finance on the witness stand and scrutinizing their books the government is not stepping into a field which is properly closed to it.

Democracy can be nothing more than a sham if some form of social control cannot be made effective over the men whose day-by-day decisions affect the lives of innumerable citizens.

SMALLER GIFTS TO COLLEGES.

THE day of great gifts to colleges and universities is just about over, if a recent appeal from President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University to Columbia alumni is taken as a criterion.

In this appeal President Butler urged support of the university through small gifts. In the past Columbia has been very fortunate in getting many large donations. But now, says President Butler: "The great fortunes and the large accumulations which made these benefactions possible are either dissipated or destroyed. The economic and financial crisis which grips the whole world has made their return quite impossible, certainly for a long time to come, if not forever."

the effects of our frozen assets are now being felt there.

Perhaps Mr. Morgan's idea of "the forgotten man" was the tax collector.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
Register-Guard Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON.—The political implications of the Morgan disclosures are likely to be numerous. The country has never heard anything like those disclosures and reports indicate that it is pretty sore.

Much more startling than the revelation that the Morgan partners paid no income taxes was the fact that the Morgan firm, with its hands on a vast network of industry and finance, had distributed favored impartially among leaders of both the Democratic and Republican parties.

Half a dozen men who had been seriously mentioned for the presidency of the United States were among those to whom Morgan secretly sold stocks at not much more than half the market price. It is fairly certain that none of them will be seriously considered again.

As long as they participate in politics they will be subject to attack as "Morgan men."

In both parties the cleavage will be accentuated between those who believe it is quite all right for a public figure to maintain a profitable friendship with the House of Morgan and those who don't. Progressives in both parties have new ammunition and a new battle-ground involving the great Morgan "spider web" of control.

There's a real political philosophy in the investigation. The men who have pushed it—and President Roosevelt himself has at last given it his blessing—want to reduce the Morgan power. That power has been less obvious in this administration than in any for a long time. Roosevelt, ever quick to seize a strong popular reaction and capitalize it, is expected to move in some way which will strengthen his popular support and leave him in a better position to place the Morgan and associated interests where they can no longer be considered an "invisible government."

Opponents on List
The list of prominent Democrats who received Morgan largesse was strongly reminiscent of the bloc of conservative party leaders who stood against Roosevelt when he sought the Democratic nomination. John W. Davis, John J. Barkley, Owen D. Young, Newton D. Baker, H. M. Haruch were among them.

Their political influence waned at the Chicago convention and now takes another look. The only important erstwhile "stop-Roosevelt" leader missing from the lists was their old friend Al Smith.

Some of the senators who voted against publicity for lists of the stock beneficiaries have some cause for worry since their own names were made public. Any one of them who isn't called on for an explanation the next time he comes before the voters will be lucky.

Senator McAdoo of California, who lost a presidential nomination nine years ago after it was disclosed that he had accepted a fee from Doherty, the oil man, doesn't have to run again for five years, but he was wild when he found that he was to be revealed as a Morgan friend who had received stock at below market value.

"Coalition of Rich"
Any third party movement which develops may be expected to make the Morgan revelations its chief stock in trade, since leaders in both the old parties have been smeared. Such a movement can make good use of the words of Senator James Couzens of Michigan, the richest man in Congress and a member of the investigating committee, who says:

"When it comes to money there are no Republicans or Democrats. Rich men never fight each other seriously. There's the finest coalition between all parties when it comes to the Treasury of the United States."

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

TWO SERIOUS TO WISERACK ABOUT
(The Sheridan Sun)
JUST exactly what the reaction will be in this country when it becomes generally known that the largest bankers of the country, if not in the world, paid no taxes in the three years probably not susceptible of complete assessment at the present moment. It is, however, a matter that is plenty serious enough. It is a condition that the federal government, if it is concerned at all about the continuance of our present form of government, should immediately take definite steps to correct, and not for future cases, but specifically in the present instance.

Millions of people in the United States believe that the great banking house now under investigation is, in fact and truth, the invisible government of this country, and that their riches and power come directly to them through the governmental prerogatives of such tremendous power and profit that they are only a little lower, indeed any, than the government itself. If they, then, can exempt the burdens under which the mass of the population is struggling; if they are excused because the years have not been so profitable, what reason or incentive is there for the small citizen to make honest returns or make sacrifices to pay his taxes to the nation because of love of that nation.

There are powers more potent than wealth. There are forces that not only can, but will, sweep wealth into the discard, once it is aroused and unless the government of the people and for and by the people quickly and clearly discern the fact that methods such as have flourished in the past decade are definitely and decisively eliminated, there will, in the vernacular, be "hell to pay" in this land.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine
MOST Americans, being independent and individualistic, feel themselves competent to fix defects in plumbing and almost equally competent to take care of their own disturbances of health, as well as to prescribe for more complicated disturbances which really ought to have the prompt attention of a physician.

If one looks over the average family medicine chest he is likely to find it full of strange concoctions and things of all kinds—an array of disorder which actually endangers the family's health and safety.

A survey which I made of the contents of medicine chests of a considerable number of families brought out some exceedingly interesting information.

Among the strange items found in these medicine chests were old cloths to be used as bandages, cracked atomizer bulbs, horse-horn candy, shoe horns, curling irons, dried sponges, packages of seeds, hair grease, mango cure, face bleach, shoe polish, empty tooth paste and shaving cream tubes, 50 different remedies for colds, combs for permanent waves, 50 different pills; the remaining partners of discarded old links, nail polish, bath salts and discarded sets of teeth.

The number of antiseptics found, and their efficiency, varied tremendously. One or two antiseptics were found in some cases, and as many as six different antiseptics in others, individual members of the family having their own likes and dislikes in these matters.

Apparently most American housewives need a lot of education concerning the significance of what are actually effective and useful household remedies. A household remedy should be one with a certain definite action, and usually it should contain but one active ingredient. If the thing is worth keeping in the medicine chest it should be something which is used fairly frequently.
