ANOTHER SLANT ON PROBLEMS.

ONE of the most encouraging things about the world's present difficulty is the fact that all of its major problems are in the highest degree fractional. They need only to be stated to have their inherent absurdity made obvious; and the more they are stated and examined, the more likely it becomes that mankind will recognize their absurdity and do away with them.

There never was a time when natural forces operated to make nations neighborly as strongly as they do now. World-wide communication is an accomplished fact. Distances have shrunk to mere fractions of their old length. The increasing complications of world finance and trade have made all countries interdependent. A new network of treaties has been set up to preserve the peace. Events have compelled the dullest men to realize that war costs more than it can possibly be worth.

Yet in the face of all these facts, one of our very greatest problems is the problem of keeping the peace. The world is drifting toward war in spite of the fact that it has more reasons for staying at peace than it ever had before.

It is the same in the economic field. We have developed the art of production to the point where poverty need no longer exist. We can make more of everything than we can possibly need. The masses of mankind can enjoy more luxuries than the wealthy could have a few generations ago.

Yet, poverty is increasing and we suffer from a shortage of nearly everything; and as Edward A. Filene, the Boston merchant, has pointed out, poverty has increased most rapidly in those nations whose ability to produce wealth has been most augmented.

Similarly, world trade today ought to thrive as never before. The facilities for it were never so great; the need of the various nations for the things produced by their neighbors was never so great; the financial arrangements whereby the flow of goods is made easy were never so well developed. But world trade dwindles, year by year, and most nations have been busy cutting it down still further by means of tariffs, import restrictions, quota laws and the like.

These problems, when examined carefully, simply don't make sense. Is it too much to expect that we shall presently find a way to start moving with the tide instead of against it?

A SUCCESSFUL FAIR.

IT would be hard to estimate exactly the amount of influence a great fair can have on a country. Historians generally agree that the Columbia exposition, held in Chicago 40 years ago, was a tremendous cultural force in the developing life of America; and it is interesting, therefore, to read that the attendance at Chicago's 1933 Century of Progress exposition during its first five days surpassed the Columbian's attendance during the same period, by 409,000 to 185,000.

When Philadelphia's Sesqui-Centennial exposition resulted in failure a few years ago, it was commonly said that the day of the great world's fair was over. The Century of Progress affair seems destined to disprove that statement in short order. And it appears quite likely that the event will have quite as great an influence on the cultural life of the country as its famous predecessor of 40 years ago had.

GUARANTEED BANK DEPOSITS.

NEWS that Congress is acting to guarantee bank deposits of moderate size is pretty certain to be received with rejoicing.

With such a provision written into law, the return of confidence to the ordinary man should be greatly accelerated. He would know that his bank account was safe. Knowing that, he would not be assailed by the impulse to hoard cash in his own home or in a safety deposit box; furthermore, he would be much more willing to spend his money in a normal manner, assured that the bottom was not going to drop out from under him without notice.

That such a law would represent an abrupt departure from traditional banking practice goes without saying. But one who surveys the banks' record during the last few years is likely to conclude that the more sharply some of those traditional practices can be modified the better off we shall be.

No man being escaped the Custer massacre, but on horse did, and on its death it was stuffed and mounted. The mount is now exhibited at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Scanning the reports of the Morgan shindig at Washington, the only way we can figure out to get even with Big Business is for each one of us to "incorporate."

Writer of a Biah Colyum says that safety is the sign of a truly happy house. But that dame never had to listen to Baby gurgling spinach.

So far as available records go, there is nothing to show that a girl who grew up to be a stenographer ever won a spelling bee.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By ROONEY DUTCHER
Register-Guard Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON, June 10.—A small collection of miniature necessities, such as every man includes in his medicine cabinet, led to the first hint of scandal in the Roosevelt administration.

The toilet kits which White House Secretary Louis M. Howe was alleged to have caused to be purchased at $140 apiece for the Civilian Conservation Corps—which army officers said could have been had for 75 or 85 cents—even caused an apparent conflict of testimony between important administration officials.

Regardless of the extent to which Howe may have influenced Director Robert Fechner's purchase of 200,000 of the kits, you may be able to decide for yourself whether the government stood to be gyped. An inspection of one of the kits reveals the following articles inside a handsome, silver-stamped, blue cardboard box:

- One gilded snap-type razor.
One 35-cent size package of five single-edge blades.
One small nickel-plated mirror.
One shaving brush with nickel-plated handle.
One long black comb.
One tooth brush in ventilated, nickel-plated canister.
One tube of soap in nickel-plated box.
One 25-cent size tube of tooth paste.
One 25-cent size tube of shaving cream.
One sewing kit—thimble, spools of white and khaki thread, three big-eyed needles and three or four common pins.

Most of the articles are "standard brands," bought at quantity rates by the Be Vier company which assembled the kits. "No cheap stuff," the C. C. C. insists, sneering at the army, whose kits omit such essentials as tooth paste, shaving cream and soap container and offer only two blades.

Is He Downhearted? No!
The irritation of having Howe, his closest confidant, searching for evidence by Congress was just another one for Roosevelt. Democratic senators had just knocked out the vital license provision of his industrial recovery act in committee.

Another Senate committee had emasculated his arms embargo measure and the Senate had knocked off $170,000,000 of his veterans' economy program. Congress seemed headed for a jam which would keep it in session to embarrass Roosevelt as the economic conference opened June 12 and debt payments came due June 15.

But on the day all these things seemed to come to a head the president took his first dip in the new swimming pool and that evening gave a swell party for the correspondents through which he laughed, joked and gave every indication that he was having the time of his life.

The Howe incident followed strong pressure on Roosevelt for the removal of Secretary of the Treasury Woodin and Special Envoy Norman H. Davis, the following Morgan disclosure. Some of his most trusted advisers among liberals and progressives urged him to fire Woodin and Davis at once, insisting that prompt dismissal of "Morgan friends" would solidify Roosevelt's popular strength at an important time.

The president apparently didn't explain his position to those who so argued, but he let it be known that no one would be fired—although belief persists that Woodin will resign before the end of the year.

ON BIRTH STATISTICS.
MONMOUTH, Ore.—(To the Editor)—In your editorial of June 7 you presented a refutation to Frederick Osborn's conclusions from the fact that those individuals who demonstrate ability are not producing their proportion of the offspring of the next generation. There seem to be some aspects of the problem that deserve further consideration.

The U. S. Census Bureau in its "Birth, Stillbirth, and Infant Mortality Statistics for the Birth Registration Area of the United States," shows that, in general, the more ability an occupation requires, the lower is the birth rate of those engaging in that occupation. I do not have Osborn's figures at hand; permit me to present a few illustrations from the publication mentioned, the 1929 issue.

The coal mine workers average 3.7 children, while designers, draftsmen and inventors had only 1.8 children, less than half the rate of the coal diggers.

Railroad boiler washers and engine hostlers compare in reproduction with artists, sculptors and teachers of art, as 2.4 compares with 1.9.

- Other average rates are:
Chemists, assayers, and metallurgists .....1.9
Blacksmiths, forgers, and hammermen .....3.3
Jewelers, watchmakers, goldsmiths and silversmiths 2.2
Blacksmiths, forgers, and hammermen .....3.3
School teachers .....2.1
Janitors and sextons .....2.2
Captains, masters, mates and pilots in water transportation .....2.6
Lap-holders and steredores .....2.4
Electricians .....2.3
Semi-skilled operatives .....2.7
Laborers .....3.2

It appears that whenever an individual shows ability by actual accomplishment, or even if he has reason in ability to suppose he can accomplish something, we put social pressures on him which prevent his proportionate participation in the reproduction of the future race. In other words, every generation is, in the main, the product of the unaccomplished of the previous generation. It appears likely that breeding generation after generation from the unaccomplished is bringing about a less capable species—even now unable to handle the complexities of social problems by democratic means.

"So far," you say, "the world has managed to get along pretty well" in spite of the tendency of the accomplished not to reproduce proportionately. And one often hears it said, in similar scoffing vein, that ancient scholars predicted the downfall of civilization, yet civilization somehow blossomed more and more luxuriantly. But did it? Has "the world" managed to get along pretty well? What civilization? Whose world? Egyptian scholars thought Egyptian practices might lead to Egyptian decline. They did! Learned men of Greece predicted that trouble lay ahead. "Civilization" blossomed then in Caesar's Rome. Was that a total recompense to the Athenian that Greece was just a memory? Stodious Romans felt misgivings concerning maladjustments in the Empire; but other Romans thought "the world has managed to get along pretty well—why be bothered." As a Roman of 1000 A. D. would have seen it, which was right?

And, coming to Osborn's implications, if the punier Americans of 2000 A. D. are incapable of handling the complexities of social organization, will it be complete compensation to them that in Japan, perhaps, or in Russia, or in South Africa, "the world has managed to get along pretty well"? And should the dim possibility of the blossoming of civilization in South Africa be sufficiently solacing to Osborn to compensate for the passing of the glory of America? Or is it perhaps justifiable that he try to do something about it?

Yours very truly,
ELMER PENDELL.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine.
MILLIONS of words have been written about shoes, and every shoe manufacturer seems to have his own idea.

There are shoes with flexible shanks and shoes with rigid shanks, as well as shoes with semi-flexible and semi-rigid shanks.

People without any foot troubles, according to Dr. Philip Lewin, will do well in flexible shank shoes. Those who have foot troubles, however, and who require both exercise and support, will sometimes feel much better with shoes with a rigid shank.

It is believed that the best type of shoes have round toes, medium width shanks, and are made over a last with a straight in-line border.

Extremes in the height of heels are undesirable, and a good heel is neither too low nor too high, nor is set too forward or too far backward.

Few people understand how to take care of their shoes properly. Shoes will last much longer and give much better service from the point of view of protecting the feet if they are changed at least once daily, and if the pair that is not in action is kept on a suitable shoe-tree or shoe-form.

The rubber heel has proven so well its advantages in minimizing shock to the feet and thereby to the other organs of the body that there is no longer need to emphasize its virtues.

It is now well established that the circulation to the feet must be well maintained if the toes are to be healthy. Such circulation is not maintained when the upper leg is too greatly constricted by tight garters or by rolling the stockings in a hard ridge or knot.

This constriction causes interference with the regular flow of blood and tends to break down the valves in the veins, resulting in varicosity. A recent improvement in the development of stockings with a slight flexible top, thus preventing constriction and making garters unnecessary.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES OF WESTFIR MANY

WESTFIR, June 10.—(Special)—Cascade Post No. 64 and the auxiliary held their business meetings Wednesday evening. This was the last business meeting of the auxiliary for the current year. Mrs. L. F. Larwood reported on Child Welfare work and Mrs. Charles Croner reported one new member secured for the auxiliary in Oakridge. Recent poppy sales for Oakridge and Westfir totaled about $20.

Mrs. L. F. Larwood was appointed as auxiliary chairman for a picnic to be given jointly by the post and auxiliary. It will probably take place in July.

It was decided that the auxiliary entertain the Girl Scouts of Oakridge and Westfir with a picnic sometime during the summer.

Mrs. Richter outlined plans for the picnic to be given this fall, Thursday afternoon, June 22. It has been designated as "sawing day" and all auxiliary members are invited to attend at this time at the home of Mrs. Richter.

Election of officers did not take place at this time. It is to be held next fall. The following officers were nominated: Mrs. A. E. Gerimonte, president; Mrs. Mary Nugent, vice-president; Mrs. W. F. Rehwal, secretary and Mrs. L. F. Larwood, treasurer. Mrs. Fred Richter, Mrs. Luther Rogers and Mrs. J. Kennedy were nominated on the executive committee.

Following the meeting eight tables of cards were in play at one end of the hall while the remainder of the floor space was used for dancing. An entertaining evening was enjoyed.
