PACIFIC HIGHWAY RELOCATED.

A Survey for the relocation of the Pacific highway from Junction City to a point south of Eugene, probably near Goshen, has been ordered by the state highway commission.

There have been protests against any change in the location of the Pacific highway, and it is perfectly true that no big change can be made without hurting some interests.

At any rate, judgments should be reserved till the new plans actually are produced. Thus, there is little likelihood that the section south of Eugene will be far distant from the present route or leave any important communities out.

It is safe to say that in the long run every community and every person in Lane county will benefit by the rebuilding of the Pacific highway.

In this community it will be wise policy to cooperate with the commission and work with them to obtain the best possible all-round results for us and for the rest of the state.

WHERE THE HONOR BELONGS.

SOME military mind in the Chicago area seems to have nourished a misconception about the nature of Memorial Day.

When plans for the parade were being made, the G. A. R. veterans assumed that they would lead the procession. But the commander of troops in that area announced that if any regular army or national guard units were to participate they must march at the head of the procession.

We might as well remember that Memorial Day is, by tradition, first of all a day for the Civil War men. In the north, it belongs to those who fought for the Union; in the southland to those who fought for the Confederacy.

A NEEDED REFORM.

IT is worth noticing that the new securities bill just put through at Washington will make it unnecessary in the future for a Senate committee to hold an expensive investigation to find out what men were on the "favored lists" of firms like the House of Morgan.

The new bill provides that any corporation which sells stock at varying prices must first notify the Federal Trade Commission, and the names of the "friends" who are permitted to buy below the market will be available to the newspapers.

It seems likely that this will cut down on such extensions of privilege to a favored few. Deals of that kind do not thrive in the light of publicity.

"Indiana Farmer Plows Up $7000 in Field"—Headline. It's gratifying to know that there is at least one man who can make farming pay these days.

A young wife's most anxious moment, says a woman's page writer, is when she bakes her first cake. Yes, and for her husband when he eats a slice of it.

Spend the Fourth in Eugene is a bully slogan! The next problem is how much.

Anyhow, the rivers are going down again and the fishermen will be going up.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER Register-Guard Washington Correspondent WASHINGTON—Mr. Frank H. Schrenk, president of the North City Trust Company in Philadelphia, seems to have started something.

Any attempt to organize the 20,000,000 discontented depositors in closed and restricted banks obviously has possibilities. The possibilities in embryo are seen in the National Depositors' Committee organized by Schrenk and former Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, its counsel, which recently had its first meeting here and let out a loud roar.

Perhaps there aren't 20,000,000 depositors with $8,000,000,000 tied up in closed and crippled banks, as Schrenk says there are, but there certainly are more of them than the war veterans, or organized farmers and organized wage earners. They are largely voters and seem to be the makings of the most powerful and sorest lobby ever operated in Washington.

The depositors who came here to demand action insisted that they were being made the goats of the "new deal" and the strengthening of the banking system. Their chief demands are for a 100 per cent opening of restricted banks with government support and a prompt payoff of 60 per cent for depositors in closed banks. These demands are likely to be heard from now until something is done.

All walks included. The delegates included bankers, business men, farmers and working people. Many sad tales were told of folks who had large sums tied up in banks, but who had been found starving or were losing their homes.

A clergyman from Bethlehem, Pa., lamented the fact that after President Hoover had urged the people to have faith and keep their money in the banks he and many other ministers had reiterated the plea from the pulpit, only to have the government close all banks and then refuse to open a large proportion of them.

Schrenk is a restricted bank. He says that he, in common with other bank presidents, presented plans for reopening to the government and was refused information as to what might be done. So he organized 130 restricted banks in the Philadelphia Reserve District and they all presented a plan to Roosevelt, the R. F. C., the treasury and the Federal Reserve.

Congress Sympathetic Schrenk quickly learned that banking officials here didn't want to deal with groups, but he found that congressmen were sympathetic with depositors—whom no one ever came here to represent.

A week before Congress adjourned he sent a call to about 5000 presidents of closed and restricted banks, asking them to get in touch with their chief depositors who would contact other depositors and appoint delegates. About 300 came to the conference and hundreds of others sent telegrams of applause.

Small Banks Helpless The small banks have flooded Washington, but couldn't do anything by themselves. Depositors had no knowledge of banking technique, no standing with national or state authorities and no one to make their indignation cohesive. This Schrenk and other bankers intend to do.

The committee demands that the R. F. C. release all prime assets to the affected banks, accept instead the slow or frozen assets on the basis of 1926 values to be held and liquidated as prices advance, lend up to 80 per cent on these assets and take over depositors' rights on payment of 60 per cent of deposits from federal funds.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

ARE COUNTIES WANTED?

REFERENCE has been made in this column and in the news of State Treasurer Rufus Holman's proposal for the elimination of Oregon counties as expensive and unnecessary. As frequently happens, Holman is about half right. Oregon counties are in the main expensive. That much is certain. It is possible, if one gets way down to fundamental needs that they are unnecessary as well.

But they are tremendously convenient. We believe that the people, in general, find them so. We do not believe that they are worth what they cost, but it is not necessary to eliminate the system to reduce the expensiveness of the system.

For example, there will be on the ballot at the coming special election in Jackson county a constitutional amendment which will permit individual counties (following enactment of statutory amendments) to adopt the managerial form of government. That is the sort of thing which will make for county expense reduction. Even after the adoption of the constitutional amendment and the later passage of statutory amendments, no county would be bound to adopt the new system except on majority vote within that county; but those that want to be economical and efficient could be economical and efficient.

Some years will elapse, however, before the county manager plan may be utilized in Deschutes county. The constitutional amendment which comes up for vote in July does not leave counties free to effect the desired change. It merely paves the way. Change for necessary change of statutes is practically nil until the legislative session of 1935. It would be getting on into autumn before the county election could be held and it would be 1936 before the new system could be put into use. This is provided, always, that in each electoral or legislative step the vote would be favorable.

In the meantime the suggestion of Rufus Holman keeps bobbing into consciousness. Do the people want their counties? Do they appreciate the conveniences and the services afforded?

It is to be presumed that they do. It is also to be presumed that they are fond of their groceries and their pork chops. But the time comes when they can no longer say, "Charge it, please," to the grocer and the butcher, and get away with it. It becomes necessary to pay up, or pay something on account, or quit enjoying the groceries and the pork chops.

There are Oregon counties which are in that condition now. There are others which are perilously close to it.

It begins to simmer down to the question, "How much do the people want their counties?" Do they want them badly enough to pay the cost of operating them, or just badly enough to let the other fellow pay the cost of operating them?

If they do want them, now is an excellent time to prove it by paying some back taxes.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBURN Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

A FRENCHMAN, discussing the luncheon habits of people in various parts of the world, recently characterized Americans as tachyphages, or rapid eaters, because he had noticed that they seldom take the time for properly chewing and swallowing their food, particularly at the luncheon period.

The newspapers have carried items relative to the speed with which President Roosevelt eats his luncheon, often with his desk, and editorial writers have warned against the risk of physical indigestion and mental exhaustion for the sake of a few muttony minutes at mid-day. In this they are probably right.

One statement says Mr. Roosevelt's luncheon usually requires 45 minutes. If he takes 45 minutes to eat luncheon he probably is taking more time than most Americans. Most offices and plants allow a total of 45 minutes for the luncheon period, during which employees have to go to a restaurant or rest room and eat the luncheon, and then come back.

Of late, there has been a tendency to cut down on the size of luncheon and to make the evening dinner the main meal of the day. Most Americans mean eat a fairly hearty breakfast, including fruit, sometimes cereal, eggs, toast and coffee, and not infrequently bacon or sausages. With such a breakfast and with a dinner including soup, meat, two vegetables, salad, coffee or tea, and dessert, the luncheon need merely include something light as a sandwich, fruit and a beverage. Many a competent business man takes only a glass of milk and a biscuit for his noonday luncheon. This does not mean, however, that the time for luncheon should be limited to the time necessary for consumption of a glass of milk and a biscuit.

The extra time at luncheon should be spent in a complete rest from the usual activities of the day; that is to say, either in lying flat with the eyes closed, or in some recreation such as a walk in the outdoors, unimportant conversation, or any similar diversion.

Unfortunately with the majority of Americans, luncheon has become a time for attending to business not attended to in the office. Before the chief course comes on, one lays down psychologically a pleasant frame of mind; between the next two courses one introduces insistently the real reason for having the luncheon, and just before the dessert one leads up to the final proposition to be discussed.

After the dessert, when there is a pleasant feeling of satiation, the prospect is induced to smoke a fairly heavy cigar and, in those circumstances, can be easily brought to sign the papers.

From the point of view of health, luncheons mixed with business are not recommended. The psychology of digestion is almost as important as its physiology. A feeling of appetite brings about a flow of the gastric juice, a period of rest gives a proper time for relaxation, both of the brain and of the muscle cells. A walk in the outdoors means oxygenation of the blood, and perhaps aids digestion.

It would not be unusual, however, if the president of the United States weakened his digestion in attending to business of the government during luncheon. The job, as revealed by the lives of men who have held it in recent years, is one which taxes to the utmost the mental and physical capacity under even the most favorable of conditions.

Jesus Rises From The Dead

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for June 18. Text: Mark 16:1-11

Editor of The Congregationalist THE story of the resurrection of Jesus quickens the imagination as it stimulates the faith of the disciples. We cannot gain the full effect of the story except as we grasp the situation confronting the disciples in the crucifixion of Jesus and in the apparent destruction of their hopes.

Men and women had followed him, drawn by his teachings as well as by his life and character, confident in the fact that he had come to establish a kingdom of righteousness and truth that would overcome the kingdoms of the world and realize their highest spiritual hopes. They had witnessed the triumphant entry of Jesus into Jerusalem with the applause of the throng, the people crying "Hosanna to the King coming in the name of the Lord!" and throwing their garments in the way in their ecstasy.

Surely it must have seemed that the Messianic Day had come, and all the deepest hope of devout Israel was about to be accomplished. Then, suddenly, had come the reversal of all this hope, the apprehension of Jesus, his judgment before the council and before Pilate, his condemnation to death, and his crucifixion on Calvary. It was indeed a dark hour, and we can understand the despair of that disciple who said to his fellow disciples, "I go fishing." For him the alluring dream was over, and there nothing but to go back to his nets.

Here and there we have evidence of the gloom that settled down on the disciples in that hour of despair. It was not only their lament over the loss of a friend, but their realization of the hope and their faith. Suddenly all was changed to gloom and despair. There came a note of joy and hope and the reality lived. Here in our own lives we have the story of the two men who brought spices for the anointing his body.

To them there appeared the risen and that his disciples saw him again in Galilee. Then came the appearance of Jesus to others, and the conversation of two disciples on the way to Emmaus. We are dealing with a mixed record. The resurrection of Jesus the external facts is beyond dispute, but we have the evidence of the experience that the disciples in the restoration of their faith with the clear assurance that Jesus was not dead but alive. It changed life for them, and we can change life for us, if we only see the vision of the Risen Christ in the same form as the disciples saw him, but to disciples in the since this record was given to us has come the assurance that Jesus living because of the reality of indwelling life and guidance.
