YOUR CHILDREN

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

A GENERAL summary of rules for keeping the baby and other children safe and well during the summer may be of help.

Watch changes of weather. Keep them out of the boiling sun on hot days and dress them very coolly. On such days the baby's sunbath should be very short and given in the early morning.

On cool nights see that covers are plenty and chilling draughts do not blow over beds. Ask the doctor about baby bunnies.

Go on with the regular cooked meals for the family. Children cannot live on salads, fruits and picnic lunches.

Wash all fruits and vegetables and wash them again—thoroughly. Especially those eaten raw.

Boil the Feeding Things

Boil everything that comes in contact with baby food—bottles, nipples, utensils, and so on. Never touch the business end of a nipple with the fingers and wash your hands before putting it on the bottle.

Keep formula, after being prepared and put into bottles, near enough to ice to cool to below 50 degrees F. Keep that way until used. The milk should be warmed to the bottles. All bottles should be stoppered before setting in the ice box.

Ask the doctor about continuing cod-liver oil through the hot weather. Some babies need it and some don't. Get the doctor to give you directions for carrying on through the summer. Get the diet not only for the baby but for the other children too. And ask him about sunbaths while you are talking to him. This is important.

Keep Sick Children Away

Keep all sick children away, even those with colds. If a child in the family has a contagious disease, keep him absolutely off by himself.

Regular hours for meals and sleep are necessary. Don't keep the children up late at night.

Don't allow too much eating of sweet between meals. After meals is the time. Never just before a meal.

Ice water is likely to cause trouble. Cooled water is safer. Teach the children to drink it slowly.

See that the children get their regular milk—not less than a pint a day apiece. More if you can provide it. It can be drunk straight or used in cooking.

Don't allow the children to eat green or hard fruit or over-ripe fruit.

The Dangers of Swimming

If they go swimming make them wait an hour after meals. And one hour at a time should be the limit on a hot day. Less on a cool one. Fresh water is exhausting.

Don't allow them to go into strange pools or rivers. Children should never bathe without an older person, a good swimmer, along.

Cuts and scratches should be attended to at once. Wash with a clean sterilized cloth and boiled water and pour on iodine or whatever antiseptic your doctor suggests you keep on hand. Have supplies such as bandages in the closet in case of accident.

The remora fish will hide in the mouth of a shark in order to escape its enemies.
