

FORMER STUDENT IS ASSISTANT TO FAMOUS SCULPTOR

Ivan Houser, student at the University of Oregon school of art and architecture from 1922 to 1924, is at present working as first assistant to Gupton Borglum, nationally famous sculptor, on the Mt. Rushmore National Memorial in the Black Hills of South Dakota, according to word received here by "Old Oregon" alumni publication.

An interesting account of the work, which when completed will include huge heads of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt, is given in the current issue of the alumni magazine. Unlike ordinary sculpturing where hand chisels and mallets are used, Borglum and Houser must use miner's drills, dynamite, levels and tape lines, the article says. Each of the four visages are to be in heroic relief, 60 feet from top of head to chin, carved out of the solid granite of the hills.

Houser's job is known technically as "pointing up," which means sitting in the studio located a mile from the scene of the operation, and by means of sighting devices and telephone instruction to assistants on the scene, locate the right position on the mountainside for the features as laid out on a 60 inch model before him.

The Mt. Rushmore project is partly financed by private subscriptions and these are matched by the federal government. The memorial will depict Washington, founder of the United States, Jefferson, writer of the Declaration of Independence; Roosevelt, perpetrator of the ideals of the nation and Lincoln, preserver of the Union. A history in 100 words, written by former Calvin Coolidge, will also be carved in the rock.

After leaving the university and before joining Borglum, Houser had an interesting and successful career. He spent four years designing on the Pacific Coast, then studied under Arthur Lee of New York. He had assisted Borglum on the "Trail Drivers" memorial in San Antonio, the Harvey Scott memorial in Portland, and the William Jennings Bryan statue in Washington, D. C. He has exhibited his work in New York, Washington and Portland, and a small bronze mask is on permanent display at the Corcoran Gallery of art in Washington, D. C.

"BELOVED" COMING SOON AT COLONIAL

A motion picture production with much of the musical charm of "Vivienne Nights" and with an appeal very like "Only Yesterday," has been booked for first run showing in Eugene starting next Sunday at the Colonial theater. It is announced today by Vern Godfrey, manager. This picture is entitled "Beloved" and has for stars John Boles and Gloria Stuart.

The picture is now showing at the Broadway theater in Portland, where it was accorded an enthusiastic reception at its opening Saturday night. It will come here direct from its Portland run.

"Entirely off the beaten track of song-and-dance comedy is 'Beloved'—written by Fred M. White, dramatic critic of The Oregonian, in reviewing the picture. 'It is serious entertainment, but beautiful and sincere, classically motivated, yet lacking none of the essential elements of drama, thrill and topical humor.'

"Mr. Boles appears as a musician, a man born into a world of fine music and possessed of inherent good taste. His ambition is to write a great American symphony, inspired by the country's growth and progress through the strife of three wars. The musician's life, however, is fraught with disappointment. His son inherits nothing of the father's love of fine music, but wastes his life in twaddling pursuits, leaving behind only a son of his own, who at last brings the new aged musician to the fulfillment of his life's dream."

"It is a wholesome and inspired production."

The picture will open a three or four day run, and already music lovers and those who watch for the better class of pictures are showing a great deal of interest in the coming engagement, Mr. Godfrey says.

Old Oregon Gives Honors to Boyer

An intimate portrait, made in his office, of Dr. C. V. Boyer, recently named acting president of the University, holds the center of interest in the January issue of "Old Oregon." The portrait is used as the cover illustration.

The issue contains a concise, clear account of developments in higher education during the past month, and outlines the plan under which presidents have been appointed for both the university and the State College at Corvallis. The place of honor is given to Walter L. Whittlesey, graduate of 1901, who is now a professor of economics at Princeton and an authority in his field.

A comprehensive review of sports, research work and other activities make the issue unusually interesting. The "rambling reporter" this month describes the activities of graduates and former students living in Bend. This was written by Henry N. Fowler, associate editor of the Bend Bulletin. Robert K. Allen, alumni secretary, is editor of "Old Oregon."

The swishing or crunching sound that seems to come from one of the wheels can be corrected by tightening the nuts which hold the rim.

ANNUAL DEBATE TOURNAMENT STARTS IN HIGH SCHOOLS

High school debate teams in all parts of Oregon start competition this month to determine district winners, and on March 5 competition between districts will begin. It was announced here Tuesday by Percy M. Collier, assistant professor of English at the University of Oregon and secretary of the Oregon High School Debating League.

The subject chosen this year, "Resolved: that the United States should adopt the essential features of the British system of radio control and operation," is arousing unusual interest, it is reported, since it is of universal interest due to the wide ownership of receiving sets. It was recently discussed over a national Broadcasting company.

Winning debate teams will be selected in each of 11 districts. Winners are then selected for eastern and western Oregon, and these sectional champions will meet about May 5 in a broadcast debate of radio station KOAC. District winners must be determined by March 5, and the sectional winners by April 16, Mr. Collier says.

Medford high school is defending champion this year, since last year the team consisting of Elizabeth and Frances Perry defeated the eastern team composed of Marjorie Johnson and Zane Kemler. Ralph R. Bailey coached the winners and W. Warren Thomas the Pendleton team.

Charles E. Saverunde, principal of Gresham high school, is president of the league, and Dr. Dan E. Clark, assistant director of general extension, is treasurer. The executive committee includes Dr. W. J. Kerr, chancellor of higher education; C. A. Howard, state superintendent of public instruction; and Miss Harriet C. Long, Oregon State librarian.

"Cradle Song" Is Crowning Production Of Drama Season

One of the most successful theatrical seasons the University of Oregon drama department has ever experienced will reach its climax Saturday, Feb. 24, with the presentation of "The Cradle Song."

This play, translated from the original Spanish drama by G. Martinez Sierra, outstanding modern dramatist, will be given but one performance on the Guild theater stage. Under the direction of Ottilie Turnbull Seybolt, who is also playing one of the important roles, the production is already taking shape and promises to be one of the year's finest dramatic treats.

Because of the high royalties being charged for the play, only one performance will be given and as a third of the tickets are already sold, those who plan to attend are urged to make their reservations at once.

The play was first produced in English by Eva Le Gallienne and her New York Civic Repertory company. Later,

"Whittlin'" Brings Income When Regular Jobs Fail; Animal Carvings Attract

By BETTY ANNE MACDUFF

Ever since he could hold a jack-knife, Bob Harbison has been "whittlin'" away at sticks of wood, making little trinkets and toys to suit his fancy. Only recently did he realize that this could be turned into something more profitable than a hobby.

Although the demand for university-trained architects has reached a low ebb in the past two or three years, Harbison has found that he has a talent which the world values—that of creative, artistic wood-carving.

Last fall he whittled a tiny elephant and a naughty little cat for his small daughter, Dorothy Ann. He painted them black and gave them white eyes and feet.

Visitors at his home admired the toys so often that he was encouraged to make more animals. He enlarged his sketches to make figures four or five inches high, and carved cats, elephants, squirrels, deer, and other animals. Having been out of a job for several weeks, he had plenty of time to put on his "whittlin'."

In October the first of these wood-carved animals were put on sale at the Merigold Tearoom and the Oriental Art shop. No one was as surprised as Mr. Harbison was when they sold and orders came for more. In the next two months he put in all his time carving and whittling funny little animals for Christmas gifts. He made and sold 45 articles during those weeks, and has been filling numerous orders since the holidays.

With the announcements that the Civil Works program included projects for artists, Mr. Harbison received a commission to carve a series of Oregon animals for the university's art school building. Two, of a mother cougar watching her cubs play, and a mother bear on hind feet with two cubs beside her, have already been completed and sent to the Portland CWA headquarters. A third will be a figure of a splendid, spirited wild horse of the eastern Oregon plains. It has already been started. These figures stand about 15 inches high when mounted on a base.

Besides all this work, Mr. Harbison has made numerous toys and game boards for the development room for handicapped children which was established in the Roosevelt school this year. He is making plans now to extend his work to creating hand-carved wood, book-ends, ash trays, and other articles.

The animals remain, however, the most intriguing and interesting of his work. Before he starts whittling, Mr. Harbison makes sketches of the object which he wishes to create. He draws these sketches for all sides of the finished article. Then he starts in on a pungent Port Orford cedar block.

After the animal is completely shaped, the wood must be sand-papered and polished until the surface is slippery-smooth. The final job is mounting and polishing the whole with a colorless wax, leaving the beautiful grain of the cedar clearly visible.

Not only is the actual workmanship on these animals beautiful for

COUGARS!

A cougar playing with her cubs is one of the carvings which Bob Harbison has made as part of his CWA series of Oregon animals. The carving is made from Port Orford cedar and polished with wax, thus preserving the grain markings. This piece stands about 15 inches high.

its machine-like perfection of detail, but the design of the animals is distinctive. There is a whimsy and delicacy of the design that appeals perhaps more to adults than to children. The cat is not just a cat, but a very personable puss. The squirrel nibbling his nut almost moves while you look at it. All the grace and beauty of the deep woods is reflected in the deer.

"That Mr. Harbison 'has something' in these new creations of his is perhaps reflected in the unusual demand for them at a time when money for 'trinkets' is scarce. A greater indication is shown in the story of one artist on the campus who picked up the first wooden deer Mr. Harbison made, inquiring the price. When he was told 'one dollar' he said, 'Surely you mean ten dollars—haven't you forgotten one of the ciphers?'

Reassured that "one dollar" was correct he purchased the piece, and 'took it home in triumph.' Since then several members of the art faculty have put in orders with Mr. Harbison.

That Harbison has taken something with which he is familiar and converted it into real art is of interest not only to artists but laymen. He used animals for his subjects, instead of attempting something ethereal or abstract, and his animals are artistic. Laymen can "understand" his art interpretations.

He has utilized odd bits of the fragrant Port Orford cedar, which combines softness with a beautiful grain. He realized that although this wood had not been used as much as the more popular myrtle, it could be worked with just as pleasing results.
