NEW TYPE OF EDUCATION.

NOTHING is much more interesting than a bold experiment in education; and one of the boldest seems to be the one which will be tried next year at Olivet College, in Michigan, where they are going to try to get along without classes.

Students at Olivet will be entirely "on their own" as far as getting an education is concerned. The mornings will be devoted to private study, afternoons to athletics, and evenings to discussions, debates, and meetings of students and professors for informal chats.

At the end of the year, comprehensive examinations, both oral and written, will be given to see just how the students have developed under this plan.

A college without classrooms is something new under the sun, and a more drastic departure from ordinary educational routine would be hard to imagine.

But the experiment sounds extremely interesting; indeed, one of the encouraging things about education today is its growing willingness to make drastic and far-reaching experiments.

It is hardly going too far to say that our colleges and universities have fallen a little short of our expectations in the last decade or so.

We have been living in a time of unprecedented change. New developments in science, in industry, in the whole complicated art of making and distributing the necessities and luxuries of life, have changed the basis on which we live and work together.

Yet our institutions of higher learning have not been giving us a thoughtful, questioning, and intellectually alert leadership to help us meet this change.

Instead—well, to a big percentage of the population, college is a place where they play football. To an almost equally large percentage, it is a sort of glorified country club where a young man can put in four pleasant years getting his rough edges planed down and fitting himself for movement in polite society.

It is a great training school for bond salesmen and bribe young business men.

That is why these college experiments are so welcome. Not all of them may work. That doesn't matter.

The point is that some sort of change is needed in our colleges to fill the place they should fill in our national life.

Persistent experimentation will help them find it.

GETTING DOWN TO FACTS.

THE congressional request that the Federal Electric Commission make an elaborate survey of electricity rates throughout the country—to ascertain, among other things, exactly how rates charged by publicly owned plants compare with those charged by private concerns—sounds like an exceedingly sensible move.

For many years we have been hearing a good deal about the difference between these rates. On the one hand we have been told that the publicly owned plant offers consumers a vast saving; on the other, that such plants are wasteful, extravagant, and inefficient, and that their rates are really no lower than those of private companies when all factors are properly considered.

This survey ought to enable us to settle definitely just which arguments are correct. We can tackle the entire power question a lot more sensibly after this survey has been completed.

A REALLY POPULAR IDEA.

ONE of the most interesting stories of recent months is that told by Secretary of Labor Perkins in explaining the origin of the NRA.

As soon as President Roosevelt took office, he explained, people began writing him letters giving their ideas of how to restore good business conditions.

Not less than 100,000 people—most of them in comparatively humble circumstances—wrote such letters to the president and members of his official family; and the vast majority of letters urged two fundamental changes—shorter working hours and the payment of wages above the mere subsistence level, to build up mass purchasing power.

It was from his perusal of these letters, Miss Perkins says, that the president got the germ of the idea around which the NRA was built.

PASSING OF OLD IDEALS.

AN interesting landmark in the evolution of social ideals in America is furnished by the recent action of trustees of Muskingum College, in Ohio, as a result of which Muskingum students are going to be allowed to dance and to play cards.

Muskingum is a United Presbyterian college, founded 97 years ago. Until just now, it has always banned those two diversions, in deference to the opinions of the people from whom it has drawn students and financial support.

Now it has polled the parents of its students, and has learned that 74 per cent of them do not oppose dancing and that 68 per cent do not oppose card playing.

Opposition to dancing and card playing was once a fundamental tenet of the evangelical denominations. Now it has just about vanished. This Muskingum action marks the passing of one of the final barriers.

President Roosevelt's walking has improved. Let's hope he soon will be able to walk as well as he ran in 1923.

Our new leisure, says a professor, will be used in thinking and running for public office. But you can't do both at the same time.

A Philadelphia man, without a job, finds himself legally married to two women, when his first divorce was annulled. Now he has a job he didn't look for.

Crooning has finally found its place. The part has been assigned to a chimpanzee in a new movie.

A MILITARY CAMPAIGN

SO Oregon is going military. General Martin will lead the Democratic forces in the gubernatorial primary, and General Ulysses MacAlexander the Republican. These two military gentlemen are close personal friends, and both have excellent war records, but there the similarity ends. They are as far apart in attainments and temperament as the poles.

General Martin is essentially an executive and administrator. During the war he was commander at Camp Grant in Illinois, and later was in command of the canal zone. At the same time General MacAlexander was in active service in France, where he made such a brilliant and dramatic record, that he came to be known as the "Rock of the Marne."

General Martin is essentially the level headed, conservative, business man type. General MacAlexander is essentially the impetuous, aggressive, fighting type. He is a man of courage and character, but he lacks fire and color. The "Rock of the Marne" is the personification of both.

If both should win—which we regard as doubtful—the ensuing campaign would be an interesting study in contrasts, and probably one of the strangest contests ever staged in Oregon. Congressman Martin would have the better of it, on his close association with the Roosevelt administration, and his sound record in congress; but MacAlexander would be miles ahead of him, in the punch and verve and color of his campaign.

In his primary announcement the Republican general declares he will conduct a dignified, sane campaign, free from personalities and hokum. It will be free from hokum all right, but it will be interesting to see how long the Rock of the Marne, can keep from grabbing his battle flag, jumping over the breastworks, and charging the opposition, with both fists flying.

And personally we hope that is what he does. As we see it, such a course would be his only chance of going places.

The people of Oregon are fed up with professional politicians and windbags of the demagogic stripe. A double barreled snapper, throwing all purely political considerations to the winds, and speaking his mind on all subjects at all times, would be a welcome and refreshing relief—a type that very well, from their sheer exuberance and novelty might carry all before it.

Putting a plug bat, ear muffs, and a maul on this hard bitten old warrior, would justify an immediate appeal to the S. P. C. A. Let him out away from his self appointed political advisers, conduct his campaign himself in his own way, and he will have a chance. But let him blindly conform to the conventional partisan ritual, and he is beaten before he starts!

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

(Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, April 14.—"Don't never touch a porcupine unless you expect to get some feathers in you!"

That homely warning from Huey Long to his fellow senators reeks with as much truth as Senator Pat Harrison's assurance that Huey is the least respected man in the Senate.

Detested as he is, Huey has quills. From that angle, respect for him is mounting. You can pour vials of scorn on him, but it's a bad bargain if you get your skin full of thorns in return.

The least you can expect is that Huey will get the galleries laughing at you, whether or not his barbs make sense.

Senators in states contiguous to Louisiana worry lest Huey enter their territory and campaign against their re-election. Many of their constituents are the type of folks who elect Huey.

He invaded Arkansas to put over Mrs. Hattie Caraway against the wishes of Majority Leader Joe Robinson, the other Arkansas senator. Connolly of Texas has had nightmares and Huey is expected to be in Mississippi this year campaigning for a friend who seeks the seat of Senator Stephens.

But here's what happens in the Senate when you touch "the porcupine":

When Robinson tried to squelch Huey last year, Long exposed extensive "power trust" connections of Joe's law firm and effectively branded him as a reactionary.

When Ham Lewis of Illinois recently assailed him, Long switched the topic to an unpaid subscription to his weekly paper and an unpaid dinner check so quickly that Ham found himself demanding that the meddling galleries be quieted or cleared. Nothing hurt Ham more than gallery laughter at his expense.

When Pat Harrison defended Robinson against Long's attacks the other day he found himself forced to explain a $15,000 note bearing his name which Long said was "part of the bankrupt assets of closed banks in Mississippi."

And Bennett Clark of Missouri, when he defended Harrison, soon found himself promising to pay Long $600 for a portable sound truck used in his own campaign—after Huey had flashed a receipt showing he himself had paid the bill.

Cheap stuff, perhaps—but an amazing performance. Unpleasant things happen to Huey, too. But his hide is so tough that it could be used for armor plate.

A TREAT FOR THE HORSE

Spectacles of the week's Congressmen George Holden Tinkham, lion-hunter and one or two Republicans who upheld Roosevelt's veto, standing in the Arlington hotel doorway dressed in dark cap, dark coat and vest with inches of pink shirt showing above the belt, khaki breeches, leather puttees and black shoes. Apparently waiting for a horse or something.

Senator "Cotton Ed Smith" sprawled in the Hamilton's lobby, handkerchief around his neck, fanning with a couple of South Carolina farmers. . . . Big, spectacled cowboy-hatted John Jones, brother and personal business agent of R.F.C.'s Jesse, fresh from Texas in the Mayflower's lobby and letting people know just who he was.

Peppery old Col. E. R. Bradley, the boss race man who recently refused to see all reporters who wanted to talk about his Huey Long row, but said, "I'll be right down" to one who wanted to ask him about the Kentucky Derby, talking that reporter's ear off for three hours.

Showers of coins drop from windows of government office buildings when the hurdy-gurdy man comes around. . . . Completed statistics on the White House Easter egg-rolling show: Attendance, 50,000, largest ever; children lost and returned, 84; children ill from overeating, 25.

The new Russian embassy has seven kitchens and kitchens, respectively, for big dinners. Ambassadors and Mrs. Trotsky, Counselor and Mrs. Skirsky, the staff, the chancery, the servants, and general fourth floor utility.

Bill Stott, just promoted to police inspector here, began his rise from the ranks when he couldn't help laughing long and loud as the then President Taft fell from his horse and landed on the famous Taft stomach. Mrs. Taft heard the laugh from afar and had Scott removed from the White House detail. But when Taft learned about that, he had Scott promoted to a lieutenant.

That north-south wage differential in many codes has given NRA a troublesome controversy. But the first public data bearing on the merit of fixing lower minimum wages for southern workers comes from AAA rather than from General Johnson's research staff.

The AAA Consumers' Guide reveals that if workers in southern cities ate the same amounts and kinds of food as northern workers, their food would cost them more than the latter pay. A given typical assortment of food would cost a southern worker $283 and a northerner $274.
