

MANNING CASE TO BE GIVEN JURORS THURSDAY NIGHT

redramatize the incidents of the alleged death duel.

The aging attorney, swiftly moving from chair to desk as they were placed before the jury, actively described to the jury how he was seated when Horan entered his office the evening of February 12. He showed how he himself leaped behind his own desk for protection, obtained the second gun and returned the legislator's fire.

Attorneys Argue Point

His own first shot, he declared, dropped Horan into a chair. Horan fell forward to the floor with the second.

Manning said he fired at random from a position on the floor.

Horan's shot struck a chair and a bookcase.

Attorneys for both the state and defense conducted arguments in the privacy of the judge's chamber relative to state questions seeking to determine the clearness of Manning's recollection on the Saturday and Sunday before the shooting.

Replies Indefinite

George Roberts, Manning's counsel, was upheld in the contention it was immaterial to the case.

Manning told the state this morning that he wrote with his left hand but could shoot with either. He said he held his weapon in his right hand when he fired at Horan.

Horan, whom the state said was right handed but whom the defense said was almost equally proficient with his left, was found with a gun clutched in his left hand.

Manning was noticeably indefinite in his replies to state questioning. He said the excitement of the events and the horror of the tragedy completely upset him.

He said it was impossible for him to state accurately distances of objects in the office at the time of the homicide or his own positions and those of Horan.

Quarrel Described

"You're paying entirely too much attention to my personal affairs and you're telling lies about me," Manning said Horan shouted at him. Manning said he had counseled Horan to be more temperate for the sake of his wife who was in poor health.

Manning said he prepared to leave the office to end the climatic argument in which Horan accused him of creating stories about him and calling him a crook. But as he started to leave he saw Horan grab a revolver from the desk beside which he had been seated.

As Horan backed away Manning grabbed the other revolver from the drawer, stooped behind the desk and then raised his hand and took a blind shot after Horan had shot twice, he related. The shot assertedly knocked Horan backward into the chair opposite Manning's desk and the latter raised and fired a second shot.

Horan toppled to the floor, kicked convulsively, gasped and then was silent, Manning said.

per cent in college enrollment. Washington showed a decrease of 10.8 per cent, slightly more than the national average, while California showed a decrease of but 4.5 per cent in the two years. California as present has 39,020 college and university students, while Oregon has but 5,481.

Professor Raa's figures show that practically all of the decrease for this state came at the University of Oregon and Oregon State College. In 1929-30 the university had 2,693 students, and the state college had 2,430. In the fall term of 1933-34 the university had dropped to 2,122, or a decrease of 29 per cent, and the state college had enrolled but 1,940, or a decrease of nearly 43 per cent. Lindfield showed a gain from 332 to 420 for the period. Reed College increased from 384 to 432. Willamette dropped slightly from 670 to 627, and Pacific university dropped from 292 to 175.

During the five-year period studied by Professor Raa, two coast institutions, University of California at Los Angeles and University of California showed gains of nearly 10 per cent; University of Washington lost practically none, or only 3 students; Idaho gained six students. Stanford lost less than six per cent. University of Southern California and State College of Washington lost approximately 15 per cent.

Constance's figures also show the two large state supported institutions the heaviest losers in Oregon during the past two years. In this short time the university lost 27.8 per cent of its enrollment, the state college 36.8, while four other non-state-supported colleges in Oregon dropped but 7.5 per cent.

Under the program the insurance reserves would amount as "good business" years continued, possibly reaching a $5,000,000 figure, which would permit widespread aid for the jobless during slack years, and level off the deep hollows of a depression.

Total unemployment benefits would be at a minimum of $7 a week under the bill, and for at least a ten week period annually. The tax could be paid in four annual installments. The measure would be effective beginning July 1, 1935.

WEDNESDAY PROGRAMS

McDONALD—Double bill, "George White's Scandals," with George White, Rudy Valle, Alice Faye, plus "Come On Marines," with Dick Arlen, Ida Lupino, Euda Yvonne.

HEILIG—Held over, "Sing and Like It," with Zasu Pitts.

COLONIAL—Double bill, "Picture Snatcher," with Jimmy Cagney, plus "Midnight Mary," with Loretta Young. Last day.

STATE—"Four Frightened People," with Herbert Marshall, Claudette Colbert, Mary Boland. Ends Thursday.

REX—Closed.

"Come On Marines" is a fast comedy. It lacks plausibility, it presents the marine corps as the marine corps never has been, and never will be, but in spite of it, or perhaps because of it, it's excellent entertainment. Top Sergeant Dick Arlen loses his chevrons because of a "dame," Grace Grady, kidnap nifty deserter, Roscoe Karns, makes him join the marines, under threat of turning him over to the authorities. They go to Philippines, receive word that shipwreck has beached several "children" 30 miles away at an old mission. Brave marines crash through jungle to save kids, occasionally taking shots at Musical Comedy villains who throw knives. Find children are all 18 and upwards, girls to boot, beautiful girls on top of that. Rest of picture devoted to struggle of Top Sergeant Arlen to keep marines, girls, separated. All ends well, Double billed with "George White's Scandals," very girly musical, good songs, fast gags.

If you like pictures that never slow down, move with so much speed they crackle, you'll go for "Picture Snatcher," at the Colonial. Jimmy Cagney portrays an ex-convict who gets a job as a tabloid newspaper photographer. He uses a button-hole camera, is detailed to get shots nobody else can nab. He does, convincingly, and he's in one jam after another. Alice White turns on the heat, while Pat Ellis is the "nice girl" Jimmy really loves. Double billed with Loretta Young in "Midnight Mary," which we've yet to see.

"Sing and Like It" has been held over today at the Heilig. Everybody's talking about the five great comedy stars who merge their talents to make it a real hit special. Zasu Pitts has the lead as the singer (?) whose rendition of a mother lullaby touches the heart of Mobster Nat Pendleton. Nat puts her on Broadway, forcing Edward Everett Horton, the mad producer, to star her. Bert Kelton, Mobster Pendleton's moll, becomes vexed, and everything ends up in a glorious tangle.

Four persons are shipwrecked on a desert isle. Schoolteacher Claudette Colbert, prim and droll, Birth Control expert Mary Boland, Newspaperman William Gargan, and Herbert Marshall, whose occupation we fail to remember. Under the spell of the jungle, Schoolteacher Claudette loses her primness and drollness, become exotic as usual. Newspaperman Gargan and Marshall battle for her affections, while Mary Boland teaches Birth Control to the natives. Ends with—well, it wouldn't be fair to tell you, and anyhow, we haven't the space to straighten it all out here. Title, "Four Frightened People." It's a good show, and it's playing the State.

Eugene drama enthusiasts will find a real treat in store for them May 2 when the University Drama department presents "The Chief Thing." 3 act comedy directed by Horace Robinson. With six Eugene students included in the cast, the play holds much local interest. It was written by Evreinov, and cast selections were carefully made to comply with his descriptions and delineations of character. More about it tomorrow.

NON-CO-OPERATION CHARGED

LANSING, Mich., April 25.—(AP)—Oscar G. Olander, Michigan commissioner of public safety, charged today that federal agents refused to co-operate with Michigan state police in their search for John Dillinger and said that "If federal operatives had co-operated with us, Dillinger might be in custody."

Olander said the Chippewa county sheriff was informed by federal agents that they "didn't need state police" when they raided a house near Sault Ste. Marie where Dillinger and John Hamilton spent a night last week.

The first information to reach the state police that federal agents were seeking Dillinger in Michigan's upper peninsula came from the Associated Press, Olander said.

GIRLS FACE CHARGES

MADISON, Wis., April 25.—(AP)—The three girls federal operatives arrested following their raid on a northern Wisconsin resort in search for John Dillinger, Indiana desperado, were held here today under bail of $50,000 each and bound over to a federal grand jury on charges of concealing persons named in federal warrants.

They pleaded not guilty to the charges when arraigned before U. S. Commissioner J. J. McManaway. They gave their names as Ann Southern, Rose Anker and Marian Marr—believed to be fictitious—and refused to divulge their ages or addresses.

Ex-Army Aviation Officer Buys Farm

Benjamin H. Inman, who was a captain in the United States army aviation corps during the world war, has bought a 40-acre farm, known as the Shreve place, a mile and a half above Mapleton and has built a new residence on it and made other improvements. He was in Eugene Wednesday on business.

Captain Inman, who has been residing at Moore Park, Cal., since the war, was ordered by his physicians to get into the country for his health and as he likes fishing and hunting, chose the Shreve country as the place to settle down. He plans to plant a large number of fingerling trout in a small stream that flows through his place.

The woman admitted passing a worthless check for $5 at the Imperial cafe in this city a few days ago and has been held in the women's quarters of the city jail since. Deputy Sheriff Mark Hathaway and his wife will take her and Reuben Charlie Goffreierre to the state penitentiary Thursday morning. Goffreierre was sentenced Tuesday to serve two years for an attempt to commit a crime against nature.

George Brockie entered a plea of not guilty Wednesday to the charge of committing a crime against nature.
