AN EFFORT TO SPEED JUSTICE!

A RECENT dispatch from Washington announces that "a vigorous campaign to simplify and speed action by the country's courts" is being begun by leaders of the bar; and it is hard to think of any reform that would be much more welcome.

Slowness and inefficiency of legal processes is the chief complaint. It is also charged that lawyers delay cases instead of pressing for a quick decision, and that appeals are made unnecessarily expensive by the requirement that the entire record be printed.

The New York bar not long ago named a commission to study the state's judicial system. One member of the commission, Harry D. Nims, wrote an article for the state bar association's journal and said several things that laymen have long been saying privately.

"On the calendars of the New York supreme court today there are about 50,000 cases awaiting trial," he wrote. "Something like 150,000 litigants are interested in these cases. They are represented by lawyers."

"These cases represent work to be done. Are we so prosperous that we desire no increase in business? Apparently, for the profession is exerting little pressure upon the judges and the legislature to adopt measures which can be used to make it possible to bring these cases to trial and dispose of them."

"The attitude of the profession is something like that of the old storekeeper who refused to sell sugar because too many people came in to buy it."

"Litigation is necessary and may be made beneficial under proper conditions. The decrease of it does not necessarily mean that there is more justice between man and man. It may mean compromise, fear, inflation of the nuisance value of unfounded and illegal claims."

All this is a mild and fair statement of the case. The delays and expense incident to legal processes have become, in many cases, quite unendurable. In some states ways have been found whereby minor lawsuits can be disposed of without recourse to lawyers at all.

Unless this tendency is to grow to a point where lawyers as a class find a lot of business taken away from them, action to make litigation cheaper and faster is essential.

EXPERIMENT ON DEATH

THERE is something pretty creepy about this California experiment with a dog who was put to death and then restored to life. The dog's physical condition seems to improve daily, but his intelligence is still sluggish.

Death did something to his brain cells, and it remains to be seen whether the revived body can rebuild them.

And all this, in an eerie and rather ghostly way, brings us right up against the oldest and greatest problem of the race. What happens when a living organism dies?

In the change strictly something that can be weighed in the laboratory scales and tested beneath the microscope? Or is there some unknown factor there—some insoluble mystery that forever eludes analysis?

It is a long time since any scientist has attempted so interesting an experiment.

BACK TO FUNDAMENTALS

SCHOOL children in Soviet Russia, says a current dispatch from Moscow, are going back to the old-time ABC's, and study them much as school children do elsewhere.

For a long time the youngsters in the primary grades in Russia have been getting good doses of "dialectic materialism" and "economic determinism," and so on—stuff that would be over the head of the average high school pupil in America.

Now the Soviet Authorities have at last discovered that it doesn't work. The kids simply can't take it.

And one wonders if the resultant shift back to simpler and more prosaic methods of pedagogy isn't more or less symbolic. Running a nation on purely theoretical lines is a fine idea, maybe, but compromises with reality are inevitable.

A school child is a school child, the world over. His introduction to the three R's is apt to be pretty much the same under Marx as under the benighted capitalists.

A Chicago University scientist has devised a sure test for intoxication in the saliva. With the decline of the spittoon, however, judges will still watch the noses.

A scientist says that exposure to the sun ages the body. What does that matter? Our modern bathing beauties take to the sun as they do to water.

Pat Roche, Chicago detective, says if he got $10,000 and three men he would bring back Dillinger alive. Why three men? Wouldn't Frank Buck alone do?

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

BOTTLING WORKS FOR OREGON

THE Oregon state liquor commission is going into the bottling business. It will buy rye, bourbon and Scotch by the barrel and bottle it for sale in the state stores. Thus there will be avoided the duty on bottles now paid on imported stuff and it will be possible to make prices lower.

Names for the labels these state filled bottles are to bear have yet to be selected, so we read, and we hasten to offer suggestions.

For the Scotch, of course, a name almost jumps at you, "McMorran's Best." Variations on this would be "McMorran's Scotch" and "Chloe's Chairman." Another possibility is "Knox's Scotch."

A wealth of names with a local flavor suggest themselves for the rye and bourbon. There are "Cascade," "Webfoot," "Beaver," "Panther," "Rogue," "Old Hatch," "Beaver Bourbon" and "Relief Rye" ought to be good numbers.

Perhaps the commission will put on a contest with prizes for the best names and suggestions to be received only from those holding a purchaser's license. Then there should be an art contest for a label design using the selected name.

The business has many possibilities.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
 Register-Guard Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The misery of millions is the burden of long, lean Harry Hopkins.

Hopkins is charged with keeping Roosevelt's promise that "nobody will starve." He is responsible for the existence of 4,700,000 American families now on relief, 200,000 more families than were on the rolls when Roosevelt was inaugurated, and a peak for all time.

He put 4,000,000 unemployed persons at work under CWA and then demobilized them. Two "impossible" tasks.

He has handled $2,000,000,000. Now he is grappling with the task of fitting 2,000,000 CWA workers into a new emergency work system.

So you might think the whole Hopkins mind would be concentrated on the immediate task. It isn't.

Hopkins, director of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, looks ahead. For years to come, millions of people are going to require assistance if they are to have a decent living.

You ought to know Hopkins. He is one of a tiny group whom disciples of the New Deal heroize in a class with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace.

He's Mighty Fighter

Idealistic, practical, sympathetic, energetic, hard-boiled, sentimental, frank, cynical, informal—however contradictory some of these adjectives seem, they're all necessary in describing Hopkins.

He fights so hard that he can bulldoze the toughest politicians and succeed seasonally in keeping politics out of relief. He works so hard that he has twice collapsed at his desk and nearly always looks tired.

Practices Strict Economy

He practices rigid personal economy. As relief boss for New York state, a job to which Roosevelt as governor appointed him, he earned $15,000 a year. This job was to pay $10,000, but was subjected to the general 15 per cent pay cut. The difference didn't deter Hopkins.

Congress granted $500,000,000 for direct federal aid and Hopkins took on the job which Hoover had left to dividing private charity. He was first to tackle the paradox of "starving in the midst of plenty."

Once Hopkins shared the hope that the Roosevelt program would employ five or six millions last fall. It didn't and Hopkins thought up CWA. In November it was announced that 4,000,000 would be employed in 30 days.

Spends Billion Dollars

Projects completed include refitting and rebuilding of public buildings, beautification of parks, highway construction, sanitation, pest control and other socially useful programs.

Special jobs were created for women, skilled labor and white collar men.

CWA was gradually demobilized and finally washed up April 1. It cost about a billion dollars.

A new, threefold program takes its place, covering distressed families in urban, rural, and stranded communities.

Hopkins had $810,000,000 left when he abolished CWA and Roosevelt will ask congress for $700,000,000 to $900,000,000 more to carry him through the fiscal year 1937-38.

Pins Hope on Industry

Most of the money being spent now goes to the new work relief program, which employs 2,000,000 ex-CWA workers and leans heavily on the hope that industry will employ more of the others.

More than three-fourths of Emergency Work Division projects are continuation of CWA projects, with "lousy stuff" eliminated and an effort to avoid such graft, politics, and poor administration as crept into CWA.

The official differentiation between CWA and EWD is that, whereas CWA workers were federal employees receiving treasury pay checks, the workers are now employed by states, counties, and communities and are signed up only on a basis of need.

Had Humble Start

The rural program covers 600,000 farm families which have been on relief and stresses rehabilitation to put them on a self-supporting basis.

Hopkins boxes his retirement-substance plan will take care of 200,000 families this year.

Hopkins, who must carry out those programs, is now 43 years old. He was born rather poor in Sioux City, Ia., was graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Grinnell College, Iowa, where he worked his way and studied economics and sociology, and began his career of social service as director of a boys' camp in New York.

He was an executive successively of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, Red Cross and New York Tuberculosis and Health Association.

He plays bridge, poker, golf, and has fished for perch and sharks. He likes prize fights, horse-racing, modern literature and poetry and doesn't mind a drink.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

BY DR. MORRIS FISHER
 Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

HOWEVER carefully you watched over your children during the difficult days of depression, you should continue to see that they are well provided for, both physically and mentally. The depression has struck children forcibly, so that parents must keep a watchful eye over them more than ever.

In one of the great mental hygiene clinics of the United States, in the city of Cleveland, it has been found that hardly a single case has come before the clinic during recent years in which the effects of the depression have not been apparent. The usual statement of parents of delinquent children is about as follows:

"I know I ought to try to help my child, but with all my other worries because of this depression I simply am frantic and do not know what to do for him."

Dr. H. C. Shumacher, director of the Child Guidance Clinic of Cleveland, is convinced that the recent economic situation has disillusioned child after child, particularly those from the ages of 13 to 20, about home owning, saving money, or trusting his fellowmen.

Dr. Shumacher has found that the depression has played a prominent part in relationship to stealing by children. True, children occasionally stole before the depression, but stealing is essentially a reaction of the child to a desire to get even, an indication of the child's resentment against the unfairness of his life.

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for May 12:
 Text: Matt. 22:1-23:39
 By Wm. E. GILROY, D. D.,
 Editor of Advance

HUMAN nature does not change through the years. It might be said that it does not change at all except as the grace of God transforms it and makes it better.

Here, in contact with Jesus, in our lesson, were certain people who made high profession of religion. They were Pharisees.

The word has become a sort of term of rebuke today, but the Pharisees were earnest, high-minded, very sincere people in the Jewish religion of that time, people of strict views and practices, so that one might almost speak of them much as one would speak of church members today.

Yet, here were these religious people in contact, if they had but known it, with the greatest teacher and the purest and noblest man of all ages, and all that they were concerned about was to entangle him in his talk.
