SCIENCE AND NEW DEAL

THE job of the scientist, says Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace in a recent Scientific American, is not finished when he has handed the world a new discovery. He ought to be prepared to insist that his discovery be used to benefit mankind.

The secretary's remark is not a new complaint, but since it is one that has been consistently ignored for many decades, it is worth while to stop and have another look at it.

"Instead of complacent after-dinner speeches in sweeping defense of science," says Mr. Wallace, "I should like to find our more articulate scientists insisting that the benefactions of science be used only in ways that are plainly in the general welfare."

"It would be encouraging to find, among scientists everywhere, some evidence of honest indignation at the way the gifts of science have been turned against society and therefore against science itself."

It takes only a very little thought to reveal what the secretary is talking about.

Brilliant men, for example, discover the secret of flight, and enable men to soar through the air like the birds; and so far the chief result has been to make war infinitely more horrible and to include women and children in its casualty lists.

Other brilliant men devise ways of enabling man to increase immeasurably his capacity to produce useful things. As a result, a few men get very rich, while a great depression sweeps down on the land and millions of men are unable to get jobs of any description.

Still other brilliant men make it possible for voices and music to be sent hundreds of miles through the air; and we get, accordingly, a mass of trivialities, banalities, and stupidities thrown at our firesides every night in a volume to make the angels weep.

You could cite many more examples, but these are enough to show that the secretary was quite justified in making his protest.

We have today enough marvelous inventions to turn the earth into a fruitful and idyllic garden spot. If we ever learn how to use them sensibly we can do exactly that.

STANDARDS OF LIVING

It is exceedingly interesting to notice that New York authorities have adopted a new definition of what it is to be indigent.

According to Dr. S. S. Goldwater, hospital commissioner, who has just drawn up new rules limiting free hospital treatment to those who are unable to pay, a man and his wife who have to live on an income of less than $20 a week are officially indigent and need not pay for hospital services.

If they have a child, the limit is $25 a week; if they have two children, it is $30 a week—and so on.

Here is something that makes one stop and think. To be sure, these rules are geared to New York's metropolitan area, where living expenses are higher than in many other places.

Nevertheless, considering the number of men who are employed—and glad to be employed—at $30 a week or less, it is evident that our boasted standard of living may not be quite as high as we have thought.

TOWARD STABILITY

THE fact that the birth rate in the United States is steadily declining may be an encouraging sign. Instead of the reverse, according to Dr. W. S. Thompson, director of the Scripps Foundation for Research in Population.

A population which is not increasing rapidly, as American population has been increasing ever since the republic was founded, should develop a more stable society than has been possible in the past, predicts Dr. Thompson.

Fewer people will be moving into the large cities. There will be less of the wasteful "mushroom" development of the kind that brings alternating booms and slumps. People will not shift from place to place and from job to job so much. Life will move along more evenly and with fewer disturbances.

Usually a declining birth rate is looked upon as ominous. It is noteworthy that this expert on the subject takes a more hopeful view.

A scientist down south warns us that we are getting "tin stomachs" from eating so much canned stuff. But that does not account for why the politicians show so much brass.

With a million-dollar investment, Henry L. Doherty is said to have gained control of a billion-dollar company. And what did he have to invest to get control of his million?

Uncle Sam hasn't mailed out his bills yet for payments on the war debt. Probably thinking how to word his apology first.

In the old days a horse would run away and hit a pedestrian. Now motorists first hit pedestrians and then run away.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

PEACE DEMAND OF THE DISABLED VETERANS (Grants Pass Daily Courier)

PRESS wires carry the story today that Grants Pass is to have next year's convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War. The story comes from Salem where the vets in annual session made some declarations regarding war worthy of wide attention.

One of the declarations was a demand for peace. "Significant," as the Eugene Register-Guard says of the veterans' resolution, "is their action demanding safeguards for peace. Those who have felt hot metal biting the flesh or the choking smokes of gas have no illusions about war. They are not foolish pacifists. They utter no mock heroic babble about 'conscience.' They recognize the need for preparedness, but it must be a preparedness limited to the needs of defense. "This country is not ready to accept the middle-headed leadership of the extreme pacifists. One glance at the world as it is reveals the need of a positive program for defense. The men who have been there" can supply a leadership which will avoid the absurd extremes and establish a program of common sense. The peace campaign has gone to some ridiculous extremes. The waving of a flag is viewed with apprehension, the sight of marching men in uniform is a sure sign that the munition makers are getting ready to plunge us into war over night. The tiny tin soldier must be kept out of the nursery as an evil influence. There is a war-maker behind every bush. Since the great 'red scare' no campaign has been more intolerant."

The Register-Guard says much of truth. Some of the declaration is too extreme, yet in the main it arises from a sensible attitude.

What struck us most strongly was the Disabled American Veterans' expression for conscription in the event of the next national emergency.

Should the country be attacked, they advocate prompt and complete conscription of all man-power AND ALL WEALTH for its defense.

That is the most sensible part about the whole resolution.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
 (Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, June 16.—They had one of those highbrow musicals at the White House the other night, organized by Mrs. Roosevelt, who likes to entertain and make everybody happy.

Mr. Roosevelt, whose favorite song is "Home on the Range," and who is always up on the current slang, walked into it on the arm of a colored servant. "You know," he confided to the servant, "I'm not very strong for this sort of thing. But I can't let it!"

Who's Crazy? Your Guess
 A man walked into the senate gallery the other day and he was very nearly nude.

To be exact, he wore sandals, a loin cloth and a short white cape over his shoulders. (Later he described himself as "the American Gandhi.")

Anyway, he wore so little that he caused no end of consternation and was promptly hustled out of view by Sergeant-at-Arms Chesley Jurney and half a dozen policemen.

It was at that point that Senator Frederic C. Walcott of Connecticut, a Republican if ever there was one, demanded:

"What do you want to arrest him for? Probably he's the only sane man in Washington."

There's a certain amount of evidence that Walcott was giving voice to an opinion widely held not only in Washington, but also in the country outside. To be brutally frank, however, one must admit that nearly all congressmen, as well as most New Dealers, harbor an idea that the rest of the nation is not crazy, but just plain dumb. (Neither idea is completely true.)

Day's Memory Jumble
 Rarest sight in Washington, Miss Frances ("Robbie") Robinson, in an NRA corridor without her boss, General Johnson. Reason: She had been out to powder her nose. . . . Willard Thorp, chief of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce until Chairman Stephens of Commerce Committee scuttled his confirmation, working with sleeves rolled up in office of Dexter Keizer, brains of NRA Consumers' Advisory Board. Thorp is doing temporary job for his closer friend Keizer before taking his job with National Emergency Council—after Congress adjourns.

Willard hotel, fourth floor: Clarence Darrow and Charles Edward Russell—his adviser, two aged, inveterate Socialists, tottering to the elevator toward lunch. Darrow unkempt as usual; Russell dapper in straw hat, tropical suit, cane and sport shoes.

Don Rieberg, biggest NRA shot next to Johnson, sticking his head out of office window to signal to Mrs. R. waiting in automobile across the street, that he's ready to go home. (Just at that point, I heard later, a sudden conference broke out and Mrs. R. had to wait an hour and a half.)

Jim Farley's house-warming for the press, beginning at his office in new postoffice building and continuing long at Hotel Raleigh's top floor ballroom; Jim, who doesn't drink, said the newspaper boys had been nice to him and he wanted to do something nice for them. . . . He'd cut his finger, "scraped it on a door." Couldn't get his mind off his work. Someone had written a speech which he must deliver soon and he stepped out on the parapet in the middle of the party to see if he liked it.

Painting of Ben Franklin in Farley's office bears startling resemblance to Jim. So does Bill Slattery, P. O. Department comptroller, just as bald, but not as tall or white-haired.

All Democracy's patronage lieutenants are there, including big Emil Hurja. You may have thought they were tough, unprincipled scoundrels, but they talk like sure-hearted exponents of the New Deal. Also Bob Jackson, J. Bruce Kremer and Arthur Muliken—the "big three" lobbyists who quit the national committee because F. D. said they must do that or quit lobbying. High P. O. official confides each is as politically potent in home state—New Hampshire, Montana, Nebraska respectively—as ever.

Washington hotel coffee shoppe for dinner: Vice-President and Mrs. Jack Garner. Jack calls out to a newspaper man: "Hey . . . you're looking pale. Trouble with you is you don't drink the right brand of whiskey."

Willard hotel again, hours later: Absinthe frappe in stag room with Sidney Hillman of Analaunated Clothing Workers and NRA. Objective conversation about everybody, but big embarrassment because I invited Sidney in and find I've left my pocketbook somewhere, so he pays the bill.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
 Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

WITH the coming of summer, more and more people take the chance of poisoning by the ivy, the oak, and other poisonous trees. These vines secrete an oil which is so irritating to persons susceptible to it that one-millionth of a gram can produce a serious irritation of the skin.

Fortunately, the vast majority of people are not susceptible. In those who are, there is severe redness and swelling of the skin anywhere from a few hours to one to two days after contact with the irritating oil. The usual places where the spots appear are the backs of the hands and forearms, the face, the neck, the genital region, and occasionally the feet and legs.

The blisters that form usually break in from two to four days, leaving a raw surface, on which crusts form. Healing takes place under these crusts.

Those who know they are susceptible to poison ivy should avoid exposure to the plants and, at such times as they may be exposed to it, they should wear rubber gloves.

When exposed, the irritating oil deposits on the skin should be removed as soon as possible by scrubbing first with soap and water and following with alcohol or gasoline.

Always scrub away from the parts of the body that have not been exposed—that is, rub from the elbows downward instead of toward the elbows and knees, since this may serve to spread the irritation.

The person affected should also take a full bath and have a complete change of clothing. Clothing that has been contaminated with the poison should not be used until it has been thoroughly washed or cleaned.

For severe itching and burning, the skin may be protected with dressings of paraffin, such as are used for burns, or with calamine lotion. In milder cases the use of a simple dusting powder like zinc stearate, is helpful.

A small amount of phenol and menthol added to the calamine lotion serves also to prevent itching. Any doctor can write a prescription containing the proper amounts of these substances.

After the itching and burning have subsided, the healing of the affected spots can be hastened by use of suitable protective ointment and pastes.

Text: Matt. 28:1-20
 The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for June 17.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
 Editor of Advance

CALVARY was not the end of the gospel story. From its shadows and its darkness we emerge into a new dawn.

The closing and permanent chapter came with the actual dawning of day as Mary Magdalene and the other Mary came to the sepulchre before it was fully light, that they might be near the place where the Master whom they loved had been buried.

How beautiful an incident is this! Here were these women without any expectation that they would find anything but a sealed tomb. If there were hope in their hearts of a resurrection, if they had understood any of the mysterious things that Jesus had said concerning his return, we have no evidence of it in Scripture.

On the contrary, when they came to anoint the body of Jesus they were deeply concerned about the great stones that sealed the sepulchre and about it being almost impossible to guess what they were not in their hearts any hope of finding an unsealed tomb and a risen Lord.

What a touching picture of love and loyalty! If any power might bring one back from the dead, would it not be the power of such faith and such loyal love? Perhaps it was not, after all, a mere coincidence that it was to such women as these that the living Christ was revealed.

It was not natural that the great emotion of the experience should have created in their hearts both fear and joy. They were in the presence of an incredible mystery, yet they thought that their Lord was living, and that they should see him again, was larger than any sense of fear or wonder.

Then, as they went to tell the disciples, how simple was their meeting with Jesus. He confronts them in the way, and bidding them "All hail," en-
