

GRANGERS PICNIC AT DILLEY'S PARK

Plans have been completed by the Pomona grange of Lane county for the big grange picnic and celebration July 1 at Dilley's Riverside park. Bert Beaver, Wiley Maxwell and O. E. Crowe are the committee in charge.

Dean Wayne Morse of the law school at the University of Oregon will be the principal speaker. It was announced Friday, Mrs. C. S. Calef, Pomona lecturer, has charge of the program and she announces that it will be one of more than usual merit.

The events of the day will begin at 10 a. m. and will include a basket dinner at noon. The sports events will consist of water contests, two baseball games, races and other land contests. In the baseball games Lorne and Dilley's will be pitted against each other and the Juniors of Clear Lake will play against Crowe's juveniles.

All grangers of the county and everybody else interested are invited to attend.

Editors Oppose Price Inequality In Gehlhar Rule

A resolution expressing strong disapproval of the one cent per pound differential in favor of unadvertisized bread, as provided in a clause in the proposed marketing agreement of the baking industry, has been sent to Max Gehlhar, director of the state department of agriculture, by the Oregon State Editorial association's central office in this city. The resolution was unanimously adopted by the association at its recent convention in Roseburg.

It is pointed out in the resolution that the director of agriculture that advertising saves large sums in selling expense, thereby benefitting the consumer through reduced prices, and that the large output obtained through advertising enables the advertiser to cut manufacturing and selling costs to the advantage of the consumer.

The publishers' association feels that the clause referred to in the proposed marketing agreement of the baking industry is discriminatory and will, in its operation, injure the upstate baker who advertises his product in his local newspaper and who will, according to the marketing agreement, be compelled to charge a higher price than the wholesale baker of the big cities, who does not advertise his product.

New Gas Wells Furnish Mystery

The possibility of Washington becoming a competitor in the oil and natural gas industries is forecast by the drilling of what is perhaps the most interesting test well ever put down in the United States. The well is being sunk on the north slope of the Rattlesnake range in Benton county, Washington, not far from Yakima.

According to information supplied to A. E. Horn, Jr., Oregon division manager of General Petroleum, affiliates of the Socony Vacuum Oil company, marketers of General Mobilgas and Mobilol, 15 shallow wells are already in operation. Geologists have held, hitherto, that oil and gas could not be found in a basalt covered territory like the Rattlesnake hills. More than 20 years ago, however, sheepmen, digging for water, encountered gas at a depth of 750 feet. No commercial importance was attached to the discovery until recently. Besides the deep level well test now being sunk by the Northwestern Natural Gas Corporation, the 15 shallow wells are supplying gas to the towns of Grandview, Sunnyside, Prosser, Zillah, Tompenish and Granger. Should the deep well, now at 1700 feet, prove a big producer, it is planned to pipe the gas to Yakima, Walla Walla, Portland and Seattle and Spokane.

The "mystery" field is unlike any other known gas field in the world. The entire area is overlaid with a series of basaltic flows of varying thickness. These flows are interspersed with volcanic ashes and sedimentary deposits. The gas now being produced is found in a very porous stratum of basalt and not in the layers between the basaltic flows. Geologists think the gas flows from some deep horizon up the line of faulted structure to where it encounters the porous basalt which serves as a large reservoir. The new well is being sunk in an effort to discover the mysterious gas source.

Quintuplets Will Wear Lane Rabbit Fur On "Tootsies"

Five complete sets of booties, caps and jackets, hand-crocheted from Angora rabbit wool, were sent to the Dionne quintuplets Friday as a gift from the Eugene chamber of commerce.

The five sets were made by Mrs. W. T. Wilder, 1603 Lawrence street, who put in 90 hours work crocheting them from rabbit wool made into yarn at the Eugene Woolen mills. Each set was wrapped in an attractive package and each package is addressed to one of the babies, Cecelia, Yvonne, Marie, Emily and Annette.

As Angora rabbit wool is ten times warmer than any other known material, the famous quintuplets need not fear Canadian winters so long as they have these tiny outfits.

The Angora wool industry in being developed in Lane county by C. Hathaway, who recently came here from Kirkwood, Mo., who has headquarters at the Eugene chamber of commerce. He urged all Angora rabbit growers in Lane county to register their rabbits and the wool poundage they expect at the chamber. There is no charge for this service and only registered rabbits will be considered in laying the foundations for the building up of the rabbit wool business here, he pointed out.

Mr. Hathaway, who will buy rabbit wool here, insists on proper stock and is herefore ready to help anyone to select the proper stock of Angora rabbits in starting in the business, he said.

Since he has been working here, 110 Lane county residents have signed up to go into the rabbit raising business. Small initial investment is needed as the rabbits multiply rapidly and their care is simple.

Proper hutchies have been designed and can be obtained at cost and specifications are available for those who wish to build their own. These hutchies are designed with a view to cleanliness and to care of fertilizer which will pay for the feed of the rabbit, according to Hathaway.

Early-Day Relics Shown By Russell

Some of the oldest and most interesting pioneer relics yet displayed downtown in connection with the coming Oregon Trail pageant are in the window of the Sigman-Fell Insurance agency in the rear part of the First National bank building on West Broadway.

These relics are owned by Charles

E. Russell of this city and include a wagon jack made in 1779 by Mr. Russell's great grandfather, M. Swegel; a pocket knife, also made by Swegel in the same year; a fire shovel and fireplace and irons made 155 years ago; a muzzle-loading shotgun 86 years old, brought here by D. B. Cartwright who kept the old Cartwright stage hotel in the early days; a spinning wheel used by Mrs. Peter Sheets in 1836 and believed to have been made in the 1820s; a picture of the old Cartwright hotel and other articles of interest.

The auxiliaries to the veterans orders also are supporting Miss Skene.
