HERR HITLER OVER THE BARREL.

ONE of the most adroit politicians of his time is Germany's Herr Hitler, but Germany is a land of politicians and some of the old hands seem to have the little ex-Austrian house painter "over a barrel," as we would say. Wily Franz Von Papen who served his political apprenticeship with Von Bernstorff in Washington during the early days of the World War seems to be the chief engineer of the movement which threatens the reign of the dictator.

Still shouting his "Hell Hitler!" (whenever necessary), Von Papen has brought about a breach between radicals and conservatives in the Hitler regime. Professing the greatest affection and respect for Herr Hitler, the clever Von Papen has nevertheless made bold to criticize certain radical socialistic tendencies in Hitler policy.

Hitler is given his choice between continuing those policies which he must do to hold the support of the genuine "brown shirts" who furnish most of the man power in his support or swinging to the right with the conservatives, the "steel helmets" and the industrialists and imperialists, a move which means death to his prestige. Unless Hitler can find some pretext for disciplining the treacherous Von Papen, his day is done. He may continue for a time as the nominal dictator of Germany, but the world will know that Hitler is no longer supreme.

Von Papen has chosen the hour when distress is acute throughout the nation and parading for Hitler has ceased to be great fun; it is also the hour when through repudiation of debts, and other blunders, Hitler is most unpopular in the world. Von Papen is not ready to risk open conflict with the powerful radical wing, but if he can isolate Hitler with the radicals, the little upstart is done.

Well, after all they can't expect us to weep much for Herr Hitler. Von Papen doesn't inspire three cheers exactly, but the shattering of the Hitler superman myth might be a very good thing.

A BLESSING TO THE BLIND.

THERE are 64,000 men, women and children in the United States who never have seen a daily newspaper.

They are the 64,000 blind whose reading is limited to books and magazines published in braille and whose knowledge of day by day happenings in the world depends on what they are told or what others read to them.

A young New Yorker has announced that next fall he will establish a daily newspaper for the blind. The young man himself is blind; has been sightless since he was 9 years old. With the assistance of charitable organizations, he continued his schooling, won scholastic honors and a college degree.

The proposed newspaper will be published in braille. It will contain advertising as well as news and will be issued five days a week free to 5000 blind in the middle Atlantic states. Later it is hoped to extend this number so that the newspaper will reach blind persons everywhere in the United States and Canada.

There is something singularly appealing about this effort of the blind to help the blind. To those less handicapped it brings renewed realization of the thousands of blessings and advantages so commonly accepted as to be forgotten.

The young publisher states his object in establishing the newspaper is to make it possible for the sightless "to take a more active and profitable part in society." The words may stand as a challenge to those who can see.

ON A DIFFERENT PLANE.

AUTHORITIES at a New England teachers' college have ruled that women students must not wear ankle-length socks, except on the tennis court. The reason given is that these little socks are "unbecoming to future teachers."

Now, you'll have little difficulty in finding plenty of people to agree that the ankle-length sock is unbecoming. But why, one wonders, is it especially unbecoming to a future teacher? If the future stenographer, the future housewife, or the future salesgirl can wear them, why cant the future schoolma'am?

The school teacher often suffers a good deal from the common notion that she ought, somehow, to be set apart from the ordinary run of people. She has to be especially trained for her job, of course, and she has to be a woman of character and intelligence; but sometimes the insistence that she observe a different code than other women observe gets carried altogether too far.

President Roosevelt says he can't tell what the party affiliations of his brain trusters are. We'll bet Postmaster Farley can.

While, as one doctor says, every kiss you take shortens your life three minutes, your life may be shorter, but oh, how much sweeter!

Barney Baruch has decided to retire for a while and write his memoirs—since he couldn't have himself called before a senate committee.

A military dictatorship is predicted soon for Germany, the present type being only of the Boy Scout order.

The truth is that if the movie magnates really clean up the films, most of their products will be washouts.

APPROVES TRANSIENT CAMP PLAN
EUGENE, Ore.—(To the Editor)—I would like to say a few words in regard to the transient camp and believe I can speak with some knowledge on the subject.

I have been a resident of Eugene off and on for 25 years and approximately seven years of that time

I have spent hobnobbing it. I have travelled by side door pullmans all over the United States and some into Canada and Mexico. What I want to say is: The logical thing to do is to move the camp into the abandoned C. C. G. houses around back of the Butte as the quarters would be exactly suited for this proposition and no expense to the government. It was good enough to have the rough necks of the C.C.C., in fact someone tried to prevent their removal.

The hobo genius we will probably always have with us, but during times of depression the population will be unusually large and the Federal Transient Relief plan is one of the best ways to handle the problem. If they cut this off you will see hobos around again at all the back doors and mooching on the streets worse than ever.

The Business Women's Organization could well find something more plausible to do than to try and kick the down and out man.

It would be comparatively easy to put a fence around the C. C. G. buildings and make the transients stay inside and the general public stay outside.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
(Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, June 30.—Few have noticed it, but postoffices are back on the pie counter.

Congress guessed it had been too generous when it gave the privilege of allotting all the new ones to Secretary Ickes under the $5,300,000,000 public works program.

Tough little Ickes wouldn't hand them out unless he thought they were economically justified. He was so hard to convince that he even refused one for his own home town in Illinois.

Postoffices and promises of postoffices are pretty important to a congressman in re-election campaigns.

Ickes, appearing before a none too friendly House appropriations sub-committee, said if the country were going to build postoffices which the figures showed couldn't be justified from a business point of view, he hoped the responsibility would be taken away from PWA.

It must have sounded like a good idea. Congress quietly earmarked $65,000,000 of the new public works money for postoffices to be selected from two specific lists whose total cost would be $170,000,000. And left it to Postmaster General-Democratic National Chairman Jim Farley and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to choose them.

And maybe you think Farley and Morgenthau are going to have fun discriminating between one town and another when the boys come hollering!

The Ickes estimate that 2,000,000 persons have been employed through PWA, directly and indirectly, seems a shade on the optimistic side, though there is probably no way to determine the number accurately. It's often figured that $5000 spent for public works employs two men, directly and indirectly, for 12 months.

Thus far only $570,000,000 of PWA money has been paid out—excluding CWA funds. Do your own long division.

AAA Gets A Scuttling

The sad demise of the AAA amendments, which would have made AAA control measures hampback in the courts, but which were sunk in committee by senators led by Smith of South Carolina and Byrd of Virginia, recalls some amusing inside history.

Secretary Wallace and his fellow agricultural brain trusters originally worked out three groups of proposed amendments to the farm act: 1. The absolutely essential. 2. The important, but not essential. 3. The desirable, but neither essential nor important.

They abandoned one set. Soon afterward, Roosevelt told them to drop the second list—it was too much of a load for the current session.

So AAA went to bat only with the "must" stuff. It was that list which was first modified under attack and then scuttled completely.

One of the original amendments was designed to protect the consumer more clearly than the act, which might be construed to "freeze" the present margins of the middlemen—which isn't the AAA idea at all.

Behind closed doors, Chief Counsel Jerome Frank of AAA riddled it. He explained there were three possible interpretations, which sounded worse and worse as he expounded them.

"Who do you suppose wrote that?" asked Wallace. "I suppose it was Ezekiel," Frank replied. "It sounds like him." (Meaning Dr. Mordcaim Ezekiel, chief economic adviser.)

"I wrote it myself," said Wallace. "Let's throw it out."

German Trade Hard Hit

The German moratorium was no surprise to the State Department, which keeps in pretty close touch with what's going on everywhere. The economic and financial condition of Herr Hitler's country has been growing steadily worse, though you would not necessarily believe it from official German statistics.

The boycott of German goods around the world has been more deadly than commonly supposed, and German's unfavorable balance of trade is increasing.

Although the boycott may have been started by Jews, it has been taken up by other religious and political groups in Europe and even in the United States.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

YOUR eye is the most delicate organ in your body. Therefore, it requires more attention than any other part of the body.

In most of us, the eyes change as we grow older. Yet far too many people fail to consider the changes that take place in the eyes, because these changes are so gradual we are not aware of them.

It is determined just how much attention American people give to their sight, in that the records of the United States Public Health Service looked into the records of almost 9000 families in 130 cities of 18 states for one year.

The figures show quite definitely that we do not have our eyes examined as often as we should. Up to 50 years of age more women than men have defective vision. Along about middle life the eye begins to lose its ability to see perfectly, and these changes begin earlier among women than among men.

It has been found that the height of the family income bears some relationship to the amount of care given the eyes. Naturally, persons with larger incomes pay more attention to their sight than do those with small incomes, since the persons with small incomes need good sight more than do those with larger incomes.

Moreover, those in professional, business, or clerical occupations pay more attention to their sight than do laborers.

For years the medical profession has been urging physical examination at least once each year for every person who wants to find defects of the body at the earliest possible moment, and in this way to give them some sort of control.

The figures show that those persons who have regular physical examinations are also intelligent about their eyes, since a far greater number of this class had a good examination of their vision once each year.

As an indication of how badly a considerable number of people need proper attention to their sight, the fact was established that 80 per cent of those who had examinations of the eyes found that they needed glasses.

You should have your eyes examined properly at least once each year, particularly after middle life. Among signs and symptoms of disturbances of the eyes or of vision are headaches, inability to see distant objects better than those held close to the eye, redness and swelling of the eyeball or inside or edges of the eyelid.

If a child shows any of these symptoms or if he rubs his eyes, frowns, squints, or wrinkles his forehead, he should have his eyes examined immediately by someone who understands the nature of vision.
