WARS OF THE FUTURE.

A LOT of the things that have happened in the world in the last few years are almost enough to give a thoughtful person the feeling that the human race has gone quite mad.

Nothing points quite so strongly in that direction as the things that get printed when that "next war" is up for discussion.

Glance, for example, at the article recently published in England by Wickham Steed, veteran journalist.

Mr. Steed says that disease germs and poison gas will be used against civilian populations in the next war. Elaborate plans for infecting municipal water and air supplies with bacteria have been made, he says, and large-scale epidemics are pretty apt to be a part of future combats.

In making this prediction, Mr. Steed, unfortunately, doesn't stand alone. In Richard W. Rowan's recent book, "Spies and the Next War," the same forecast is made.

Mr. Rowan even presents diagrams of the ingenious containers by which espionage agents can introduce cholera germs into foreign cities.

Reading such things, one is almost made ready to agree with those prophets of calamity who assert that modern white civilization has run its course, that European culture is about to go the way of Assyria and Egypt.

When nations prepare to throw disease germs at one another, they are ready to commit suicide on a grand scale. For disease germs do not respect international frontiers.

Plant the plague in your neighbor's back yard today and you'll have it in your own bedroom tomorrow. If the bacteriological offensive is to become a part of warfare, Europe faces a future compared to which the Dark Ages will seem like a period of peace, prosperity, and enlightenment.

An English novelist recently remarked that we don't say that a man who has leprous spots on his body is a healthy man afflicted by unhealthy symptoms; we say he is a leper, and, as long as the leprous spots remain, we class him as a very sick man, no matter how sound some of his organs may be.

The same thing, suggests this novelist, is true of a civilization. This business of enrolling bacteria as soldiers is a leprous spot on modern civilization; and it testifies that the whole body of 20th century society is deathly sick.

WARNING TO MOTORISTS.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S recent letter to the American Automobile Association, calling on all motorists to come to a new realization of the responsibility that is theirs in respect to public safety, is a timely warning.

That the president is "deeply concerned over the staggering toll of deaths, injuries, and heavy property damage caused by highway accidents" is hardly surprising. The thing is one of our greatest national scandals.

No one will quarrel with his assertion that "we cannot longer afford to temporize with this problem."

That some more strict and rigid method of supervising highway traffic is needed is self-evident. It probably will take a long time to work out such method and put it into operation.

Meanwhile, as the president suggests, something will be gained if each motorist remembers, every time he takes the wheel, that it is up to him, as an individual, to see that his part of the traffic stream, at least, is kept free from accidents.

SHE SET AN EXAMPLE.

IT is hard to think of any other person in the films whose final illness would have caused as much genuine sorrow throughout the country as has that of Marie Dressler. And in the fact there is a little object lesson for the moguls of Hollywood.

Miss Dressler won the love of the country for various reasons. She was a first-rate actress, for one thing. None of her pictures ever skated to the edge of the salacious; when you saw a Marie Dressler film advertised, you knew in advance that you could go without seeing anything to make you blush.

And in addition, the woman herself had a character and a personality as wholesome and refreshing as anyone would care to find.

The film luminaries of whom these things can be said are exceedingly few. The movie industry would be in a much more healthy condition if the Marie Dressler formula for success were copied more widely.

THE LAW IN SPAIN

IF you get to feeling lazy, during these warm days of summer, and wish that the pace of every-day life were not quite so swift, you might get a little vicarious relaxation out of thinking about the way they do things in Spain.

In Spain the siesta, or afternoon nap, is an old institution; and just the other day the authorities in Madrid passed an ordinance, effective until the end of summer, prohibiting all music in cafes, restaurants, or other public places between 2 and 4:30 p. m., on the ground that such noise interfered with the siestas of honest Spanish citizens.

This care on the part of government to see that a man can get his afternoon nap undisturbed is apt to look pretty good to an American . . . at any rate, on those afternoons when he drags himself back to work from his lunch hour, wondering how on earth he's going to be able to stay awake.

After all while Julius is worrying about liquor control, George McMorran will be playing golf. He who laughs last—

Nudist couple that got married at the Century of Progress has been arrested. Chicago judge professes to be shocked. But it will take Chicago a long time to get a stunt as effective as Sally Rand and her fan.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

NEWSPAPERS AND POLITICIANS.

(The Klamath Herald)

A WOULD-BE independent candidate for a high state office recently made this remark:

"I know, of course, that the support of most of the papers already has been bought."

Forced by his listener's demeanor into an explanation, he said that he meant that by the promised placement of advertising, certain candidates had assured themselves of the support of certain newspapers.

Aside from the fact that fall campaign advertising schedules aren't out and that political advertising doesn't bring in revenue enough to be worth anyone's selling his integrity, that was a slanderous and groundless remark, typical of a certain type of politician.

Newspapers of Oregon wield the influence of honest conviction. When ambitious schemers are unable to win the support of a considerable section of the press, they seek to explain away this unfavorable factor by resorting to slanderous hints of sinister influences. Kept up, these tactics will come to denote an undeserving cause.

Arthur Hays Sulzberger of the New York Times recently made this penetrating comment:

"The presence of advertising in a newspaper gives the reader assurance that since there exists a visible source of revenue, there is no need of a bidden subsidy, and if you believe as I do that the normal man would rather be honest than not, then columns of good advertising can reasonably be taken as evidence of the journal's freedom and independence."

Good newspapers—and that describes almost any Oregon newspaper—strive to be honest in their editorial opinions and impartial in their news columns. That policy, incidentally, helps to make their space more valuable, even to a political advertiser who may not agree with the editorial opinion.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
(Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, July 7.—There's more than a desire for rest and recreation behind this ocean trip of Roosevelt's.

The president's love for the sea can't possibly be minimized. But those closest to him know that several practical considerations entered into his plans.

He will glad-hand Puerto Rico, and Virgin Islands, and Hawaii, and in each case tell the islanders about their share in the New Deal. He will meet the president of Panama, Colombia, and Haiti and radiate the Roosevelt charm through them to the rest of Latin America.

Some of his advisers privately compare this trip to Herbert Hoover's pre-inauguration "good will tour" to Central and South American in 1928.

Administration commercial policy now looks toward Latin America and Asia rather than Europe. You can bear in mind that Puerto Rico, a Spanish country under our flag, may be considered our outpost in Latin America.

The Spanish-speaking republic, feeling a close bond, have always kept an eye on the island and watched our course of action there—a fact always remembered in this capital.

Roosevelt will promise a lot of economic rehabilitation to Puerto Rico. From Hawaii—populated largely by Japanese, Chinese and Filipinos—he will make a bow to the Orient.

And to politicians the tour seems a stroke of sheer genius. It gives F. D. the best possible excuse for crossing the country—he has to get back to Washington.

Returning from Hawaii, he will make speeches and get out among the people. Political intentions are disclaimed—which wouldn't be so easy if Roosevelt merely went cross-country and back—but the net effect will be a sales campaign for the administration.

Strikes Settled in Church

If you want to settle a strike—take it to church.

Even before an archbishop had been named as chief mediator for the Pacific longshoremen's strike and a priest assigned to the Milwaukee street car walkout, Mediator Frank Bowen of the National Labor Board had come back from a packinghouse strike in Oklahoma with that recipe.

The striking butcher boys were a hard-boiled lot and several folk had been sent to hospitals. Bowen had a settlement to offer, but anticipated plently of trouble keeping them quiet long enough to permit it to be explained.

Other places being refused by owners who feared for the furniture, the strikers were finally gathered into a church.

Instead of rioting, the butchers seemed awed. Some seemed to be exploding with either wrath or tobacco juice, but all listened attentively.

They accepted the settlement without a single cuss word and stayed to clean up after the meeting.

Drug Bill War to Rage Anew

Undersecretary Tugwell wrote a letter in longhand and sent photostat copies to all employes of the Food and Drug Administration. He condoled over failure of the food and drugs act and promised the fight for it would be renewed when Congress reconvened.

Tugwell didn't say so, but the administration's battle for the bill will be far stronger than its effort last session. The measure will be even stiffer than the original Tugwell bill, if only on the theory that margin is needed for purposes of "trading" with the opposition.

Senator Royal S. Copeland, whose efforts to get a bill passed didn't excite any widespread admiration, he won't be entrusted with the job next January. The Food and Drug people found other friends in the Senate who they believe will be more effective.

Meanwhile, work has begun on a new "chamber of horrors" through which the administration will demonstrate deadly effects of certain poisonous cosmetics and fake patent medicines.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

IN the Olympic games last year, the Japanese swimming team inhaled oxygen before engaging in competitive performances.

The swimmers took the oxygen for five minutes about one-half hour before entering competition. At once a great hubbub was raised and charges were made that such a performance was unethical.

Now some scientific studies have been made and provided some facts as to just how much the inhaling of oxygen will help the swimmer. Its effects on swimmers were tried in various ways.

After emptying the lungs of air as much as possible, a swimmer took two deep inhalations of oxygen and immediately plunged into the water, holding his breath.

In 11 of 17 cases, men who did this were able to break their own unofficial records. Of six who did not break their records, four exhaled before they hit the water and one was not in good shape.

* * *

When, however, the swimmers inhaled oxygen for from three to five minutes and discontinued for from four to five minutes before a 100-yard swim, the breathing of the oxygen did not seem to have any noticeable affect on their speed.

Tests also were made of the value of breathing oxygen in running and on the value of breathing oxygen in hastening recovery after exercise. It was found that oxygen breathing in actual competition, unless given right at the start, is hardly worth while.

The inhaling of oxygen for five minutes after a 100-yard swim has little effect on recovery, judging from a second 100-yard swim 20 minutes later.

Breathing of oxygen immediately after hard exercise gives quicker relief to the breathing and circulation. If you breathe oxygen deeply three times, you may be able to hold your breath in a lying position up to six minutes and thirty seconds, whereas ordinarily the length of time during which you may hold your breath is much less.
