

LIQUOR PETITIONS IN CIRCULATION FOR FALL VOTING

With the circulation of two petitions seeking a vote on further control of liquor and the calling in of petitions seeking absolute prohibition of the sale of liquor in Lane county, plans were laid for a complete test of the relative strength of the wet and dry elements in the county after sixteen months' experience with legal beer and eight months with hard liquor.

One of the new petitions provides for the sale of liquor not to exceed 14 per cent alcoholic content. This would include light wines and beer. The other would have a vote on restricting the sale to liquors not over five per cent alcoholic content. This would permit the sale of beer only. Backers of the petitions say that signers were being obtained with ease and that little difficulty was expected in getting enough to assure a place on the November ballot.

Rev. Frank S. Beistel, heading the movement behind absolute prohibition for Lane county, announced Tuesday that he had called all petitions in for checking. He believes that enough signatures have been secured to place the measure on the ballot.

While Lane county is the only one in the state where petitions have been circulated in favor of banning all liquor sales, wet forces say they have secured enough signatures to the 14 and 5 per cent petitions in Lane county to gain a ballot place should it be decided to file there. This is not expected to be done unless Lin county dries should follow the plan used by their Lane county brethren.

Political strategy is also seen in the move since the presence of three issues on the ballot would tend to divide voting strength. The supporters of the new petitions have not been revealed, but the movement is supposed to have the backing of liquor interests. Petition circulators say they are working under Portland direction.

military spectacle in Germany since the war, recalling vividly the fatherland's pre-war military splendor.

Fifteen feet away, conspicuous by contrast with the splendor surrounding him, sat Hitler, Hindenburg's successor. His hands were folded in his lap and he sat slightly hunched forward with his head bent, a most unimpressive figure. Hitler had just sat down when muffled drums began rolling and the troops presented arms at a sharp command.

Seven Prussian officers bearing the presidential decorations emerged from the "general's tower" followed by ten officers bearing the casket. They were escorted by two generals and two admirals with drawn swords. The casket was lowered slowly to the pier as 53 flags dipped and the band began the slow strains of the "Ereica." The officers stood like statues.

Ten officers lifted the casket and bore it slowly to the Hindenburg tower. Hitler and Col. Oskar Von Hindenburg followed it into the tower.

Hitler left the enclosure and the masses began pouring into the tomb for a last view of Paul Von Hindenburg.

the 1935 legislature could take necessary action.

The board session, attended by Governor Julius L. Meier and Secretary of State P. J. Stadelman, ordered the issuance by resolution. The request of the relief committee and the lack of sufficient funds in the state's present unemployment relief fund were cited in the resolution.

The resolution did not obligate the issuance of the full $250,000 but set the limit at that amount. Charles V. Galloway, chairman of the state tax commission, who recently returned from Washington where he went in an effort to obtain further grants from the government, was investigating the exact amount necessary. It was believed the certificates, bearing interest not to exceed 6 per cent, could be sold in Portland.

to emphasize at Fort Peck the administration program for redistribution of people to better working opportunities.

"I understand," he said, "that some people, seeking to misrepresent facts, have suggested that we are going through the northwest and saying to families of marginal lands, families having a good deal of trouble making both ends meet, you have got to leave your home tomorrow morning and get out.

Explains Re-Location Program "Of course, no person who thinks twice will believe silly tales of that kind." It is a fact, however, and you and I know it, that there are many families in many states who are trying to make both ends meet without much success. It has been shown over a period of years that the land families are using for agriculture ought not, for the best economic purposes be used for agriculture.

"Now, if those families want to go on farming that land and go deeper in the red every year, I take it, it is their affair.

"On the other hand your government believes in giving them a chance to go to the better lands, a voluntary change. That is why this very broad national planning is seeking to provide farms where they won't have crop failures, where they won't be faced with starvation and where they may be able, I hope, to make not only both ends meet from the point of view of living, but also that they may come to own their farms free and clear of debt."

stituted a new system of bulletins," said Prof. Dunn.

Dean James H. Gilbert entered the University of Oregon as a student the year Dr. Strong came as president. He says of him:

"During his (Dr. Strong's) brief administration at the University of Oregon he showed unusual grasp of educational problems and a strong executive ability. He was a progressive in educational ideas and made many friends as far as the faculty was concerned. He was a man of unusual integrity and forceful personality."

Dr. Strong had trouble with the board of regents because his ideas were thought to be too revolutionary for the system here.

Composed Oregon Song

Dr. Strong is the composer of "Oh Oregon" and was keenly interested in the development of the school of music here. He was on a faculty quarter and did much to foster musical appreciation in the community. He was a member of the Baptist church here and occasionally played the organ for the services. "pinch hitting" for the regular organist, Professor Dunn, recalls the day that Dr. Strong finished his great task of making the new catalog and was so pleased that he hired a cab, and with Prof. Dunn, who was also a member of the male faculty quartet, and the two other members, rode around the streets of Eugene singing songs.

Dr. Strong was graduated from Yale university in 1884. He is the author of the "Life of Benjamin Franklin," "A Forgotten Chapter of the New England Colonies," "Government of the American People" and other historical books.

After leaving Eugene in 1902 he went to the University of Kansas as chancellor, retiring in 1920 to become professor of constitutional law, a position he held at death.

He was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity and Phi Beta Kappa.

prove embarrassing to the administration before the campaign ends. Republican speakers before farm audiences hereabouts deal rather gently with AAA—mugle initials representing crop reduction benefit checks. But there is a feeling in many rural communities that NRA has hiked prices too fast. There is Senator William E. Borah's echoing complaint that NRA squeezes the little man; fosters monopoly.

Attack Centers in NRA

Dispute over collective bargaining privileges guaranteed labor by the national industrial recovery act has figured in violent mid-western strikes. All these combine to convince republican strategists that NRA is a comparatively vulnerable spot in new deal armor.

The Brain Trust is a catch-all of complaint. If the ears-to-the-ground brigade is to be believed, the brain trust is as much discussed now as some months ago when the country was in a pother over Dr. William A. Wirt's communist plot discovery. The doctor lives and superintends school just down the lake shore from here in Gary, Ind., and dispatches relating his passage through the bear den of a hostile congressional investigation came back here as installments of that famous old serial: "Home town boy makes good."

The Brain Trust, NRA, and the administration in general are unpopular with some of the citizenry because of interference in business. Rep. Leo E. Allen, R., Illinois, acting manager of the republican congressional-senatorial campaign headquarters, said today that private credit was ready to go back to work. But, he said, businessmen were not sure they would be permitted to run their own business henceforth.

Tobacco is sold in open auctions. We buy the right kinds—mild and ripe—for Chesterfield—and pay the price

..but even that's not all there is to it

AFTER you receive the tobacco from the farmers you have to dry it just right and then store it away for ageing for over two years. Then you take the different types of home-grown and Turkish tobaccos and weld them together in such a way as to make a balanced blend.

The Chesterfield process of blending and cross-blending tobaccos is different from others, and we believe it helps to make a milder and better tasting cigarette.

Down where they grow tobacco—in most places—Chesterfield is the largest selling cigarette
