THE BOOKS CHILDREN CHOOSE.

MOTHER knows best about most things, but not necessarily about the books her children should read.

This blunt statement is made in the current issue of The Parents' Magazine. Its author, Joette Frank, makes it as a result of long experience in the Child Study Association; and this experience leads her to lay down a very simple common sense rule about books for children.

No book, she says, is a good book for a child if it fails to interest him. Conversely, if it does interest him it very likely is a good book—for him; although the child next door might not like it at all.

One of our little fallings in our easy-going habit of assuming that all children are pretty much alike in their tastes. We don't make that mistake with adults; we are ready enough to admit that one man may like the works of S. S. Van Dine while his neighbor prefers Sinclair Lewis. But we take it for granted that all children will like the same thing.

Furthermore, we jump to the conclusion that they will like the books we ourselves liked as children. We were enthralled, for instance, by the Henty books; therefore Junior will eat them up, and if he doesn't, there must be something wrong with him.

Many a father has been actually horrified to discover that such a book as "Kim" bored his son to distraction, while "Ivanhoe"—which the father himself never could endure—is swallowed whole with great avidity.

As a matter of fact, the parent's responsibility in regard to the books his children read is a good deal less than we sometimes suppose. About all the father or mother can do is to it that good books are available to the youngsters. There are many mansions in the realm of literature; provide the children with the key, turn them loose—and let them settle where they choose.

Children are great ones to recognize shams and to detect the second-rate. Ordinarily, a child will instinctively prefer a good book to a poor one.

We do our part when we put the good books before him. If he goes ahead and likes what he chooses to like, instead of what we think he ought to like, there's precious little we can do about it.

PUBLIC POWER AT MEMPHIS.

THE people of Memphis, Tenn., seem to have been about as thoroughly sold on the merits of publicly owned and distributed electric power as any people could possibly be.

At the recent election, the voters of Memphis were asked to approve a $9,000,000 bond issue to acquire an electric distribution system for TVA power. By the amazing vote of 33,476 to 1948 the bond issue was carried.

Not only is this an unprecedented majority for approval of a bond issue—especially at this moment, when voters are loath to saddle local governments with new obligations—but the affirmative vote was nearly 10,000 above the total vote ordinarily cast in a Memphis election.

Whatever the rest of the country may think of the TVA plan, Memphis evidently is heartily in favor of it.

ALGER HERO IN LONDON.

THE old rags-to-riches story is generally looked upon—on this side of the Atlantic—as a peculiarly American institution. We are so proud of the fact that our great leaders are usually men who came up from the bottom of the ladder, that we sometimes forget that similar opportunities are open in other lands.

When Sir Stephen Henry Molyneux Killick became lord mayor of London the other day, a "typically American" success story reached its culmination. Sir Stephen was born a poor boy. At the age of 13 he went to work as a messenger boy at five shillings a week. He rose to become one of the empire's most influential business men and chief executive of the empire's greatest city.

All of this, of course, needn't detract from our pride in the traditional American equality of opportunity. But it is a good reminder that we have no monopoly on that virtue.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

BRING THE BIG GAME BACK.

(Corvallis Gazette-Times)
 "For Portland, the Oregon-Oregon State game is just one big event too many on a crowded schedule."—Eugene Guard.

WE guess the regular stubborn editor of the Guard must be off duty for here we find an opinion with which we can agree. And that almost makes us feel it must be wrong. We never have appreciated the taking of these games to Portland, although we realize that financial considerations made it seem necessary. It has seemed to us unfair to the large student body that yells its head off for the team, win or lose. Most of the students have a hard enough time getting through college without any extra trips to Portland, even though they have their fares paid. They can't go to Portland without spending twice as much money as they would spend at Corvallis or Eugene. In fact, we happen to know that it takes nearly a month's spending money allowance to finance a trip to the metropolis. That is unfair to a lot of students who cannot stand the strain. It costs more than would a student body ticket which the radicals at Eugene succeeded in abolishing. And that, by the way, is wholly responsible for the game going to Portland this year. If the student body tickets were compulsory, much of the financial worries of the graduate managers would be obviated and the games would undoubtedly be held on the campuses where they belong.

Here's hoping for next year, and here's hoping too that we may have a turf field to play on. Why not? The board authorized the building of a turf field as an "experiment project." It could easily be done on both campuses by the college grass, drainage and irrigation experts and would do much to help the teams when they go on other fields having turf.

There is another reason for bringing the games back to the campus (in word we use in deference to the Guard)—it would not be so far for the OSC boys to transport a live duck.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
 (Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—A woman will be the next chairman of the National Labor Relations Board—if she wants the job.

The post has been offered informally to Miss Josephine Roche of Denver, famous for the liberal labor policy she established in the coal mines of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Company, of which she is president.

Among those in the administration who have urged Miss Roche's appointment is Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins. The two women have been friends for many years.

If Miss Roche accepts the invitation to succeed Lloyd Garrison, who has gone back to the University of Wisconsin after a brilliant performance as chairman of NLRB, it will be due to the persuasions of Madam Secretary.

Miss Roche ran for the Democratic nomination for governor of Colorado this year and lost by a few thousand votes to Governor Johnson. She made the strongest showing of any woman who ever contested for such an office without benefit of a dead or living husband in the background.

More recently, Miss Roche helped Mrs. Roosevelt by campaigning for Congresswoman-elect Caroline O'Day in New York.

Friends Warn Her

The Colorado woman has been wanting to pay more attention to her coal company affairs and some of her best friends are telling her that NLRB is a good thing to stay clear of.

The administration's failure to back up NLRB decisions—following similar failures in the case of the old National Labor Board—discourages some of those who like Miss Roche.

Meanwhile, it is interesting to contemplate the possible appointment to this job of an employer which would have the enthusiastic endorsement of organized labor. Miss Roche, who had served several years in Judge Ben Lindsey's Juvenile Court and at the Children's Bureau here, inherited a large job of stock in Rocky Mountain Fuel.

Disgusted at massacres and other violent suppressions of miners by that company, the Rockefeller and other mining interests in Colorado, she fought control and proceeded to establish the highest prevalent wage scale and other unique improvements for miners.

She is more than 40 years old, forceful, and sometimes rather beautiful.

NRA Claims to Open

The "Seven Little Clams," as members of the National Industrial Recovery Board have come to be called since General Johnson went away and a virtual censorship became effective on NRA news, are going on the half-shell.

They soon became aware of the fact that their close-mouthed attitude wasn't doing NRA any good and that publicity was more helpful than harmful. Not knowing just what to do about it, they called in a Chicago newspaper publisher who is sympathetic toward the New Deal and asked for recommendations.

They got them—and there'll be a boss publicity man and a new publicity policy for NRA.

The inside story is that the "Seven Little Clams," unaccustomed to facing the correspondents, were afraid of press conferences—which means the press en masse. They feared that they would get belted up by fast, embarrassing questions and say things which would be misinterpreted.

But they soon found out that censorships always breed wild, inaccurate stories, mixed in with some which are all too true. And the lack of real authentic "news" was strengthening an impression that NRA was to be liquidated and abandoned. (NIRB members are open-minded as to that. They hope they can make NRA work.)

So they're grimly determined now to learn how to deal with the correspondents and let the country in on what they're doing.

Doubt "Great Labor" Drive

The recent A. F. of L. convention's announcement of a great labor union organization effort left the administration expectant and skeptical.

The most powerful forces in the movement for organization of industrial unions are President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers and President David Dubinsky of the International Ladies' Garment Workers, who have the sympathy of President Green of the A. F. of L.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

EVEN those who are most eager to have some kind of sickness insurance in this country freely admit that none of the systems in use abroad would do here. One reason is that Americans like to choose their own doctors.

Many systems of sickness insurance in foreign countries do not permit a man to choose the doctor he wants. After all, the link between doctor and patient is one of the most intimate of human relationships.

One reason why American doctors have been opposing state control over medicine is the likelihood that it will interfere with this personal relationship.

American doctors are proud of the service they have been giving to the American people. Our sickness and death rates are about as low, if not lower than, those of most countries of the world. An investigation recently made by the Bureau of Economics of the American Medical Association revealed that there are few, if any, people in the United States really suffering from lack of medical care.

Another reason why American doctors are opposed to sickness insurance is the fact that the quality of medical care rendered under such systems in foreign countries is far below the average care given in this country.

In most of these systems a doctor gets a list of about 1000 to 1500 persons whom he is supposed to look after. He gets so much a person each year. In addition, in many countries, he carries on his private practice.

New doctors are only human! By the very nature of the circumstances, there is a tendency to give less attention to those who come under the insurance system than to those who are directly responsible to the doctor for payment.

The Germans say that insurance service is second class, that the leading doctors will not do this kind of practice.

For this reason it is frequently found that even patients who are on sickness insurance lists will go to an outside doctor and pay his fee, when they think anything is seriously wrong with them.

The trying up of sickness insurance with unemployment insurance in some countries has multiplied the evils tremendously. It has caused patients to come to their doctors repeatedly for minor illnesses just to get their unemployment benefits.

Thus, it is found that there is much more sickness among persons who are insured than among those who are not insured. Actually, there is really no more sickness than there was before.

Those who promote sickness insurance in this country insist that there is an advantage in having the patient see the doctor often, because then the doctor may find disease in its earliest stages.

Of course, busy doctors who practice under the insurance system take their work conscientiously and try to study their patients. But, if the people who favor sickness insurance could produce figures to show that the insurance doctors have detected a great many more cases of Bright's disease, tuberculosis or cancer than are detected by doctors in this country, their argument would be better.

On the other hand, the offices of insurance doctors are so crowded with people who have numerous minor illnesses that the doctors lack the time necessary to find the diseases of serious nature in their early stages.

Christian As Church Member

Text: Matt. 5:13-16; Acts 2:41-47
 The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for Nov. 18.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
 Editor of Advance

It ought to mean the same thing to be a church member and to be a Christian, but unfortunately as everyone recognizes, the two are not identical.

I suppose it might be said that the fact that one is a church member indicates the purpose to be a Christian or a general alliance with Christianity. One young woman who was asked if she were a Christian replied that she was, but it was found that she meant that she was a Christian as distinguished from a pagan or a Mohammedan.

It did not mean that Christian truth and Christian ideals had taken any very deep root in her heart or life.

Church membership may be a very formal thing. To be a Christian is a very real thing. We ought, of course, to distinguish between sincerity of purpose in a very imperfect character and high fidelity to the ideal.

We must recognize that many people who are weak or immature in their Christian lives are, nevertheless, sincere and right-minded. They need to be educated and guided in the Christian way, and they need to grow in grace in Christ.

It is instructive to remember that early church members were not ideal in every respect. Paul found it necessary to rebuke many of the early church members, even for the immorality of their practices and for their evil tempers.

And in the inner circle of disciples, before the church had been formally organized, Jesus complained more than once of the blindness of his leader, Mr. Workman; topic, "Why Should Young People Abstain from Alcohol?"
