MIGHT EMULATE ENGLAND.

NEW YORK'S Seabury investigation is ancient history now, and most of us have forgotten the disgraceful things which it revealed about New York's courts of law. But those revelations were a valuable object lesson, and we forgot them just a little too fast for our own good.

Broadly speaking, they showed what happens when the courts are thrust into politics—when the attainment of a judgeship, for instance, is made the subject of a political scramble, so that the man who becomes a judge must either campaign like any other candidate for office or must cultivate the good will of the politicians who have the appointing power.

That is the way American judges are put into office; and a recent article in The American Spectator points out that by following this system we undermine our own confidence in the judiciary and staff the bench with men who aren't always fit for their jobs.

The writer of this article, a New York lawyer named Jerome J. Licari, remarks that England has found a different way of selecting its judges.

"They must not only pass rigid examinations in all branches of law," he writes, "but they must also be scholars in Latin, Greek, and mathematics, and in most collegiate and university subjects. They must be cultured gentlemen. When they become candidates for the bench, they must take fresh examinations in both legal and academic subjects."

As a result, says Mr. Licari, an English judgeship is a legal career, not a political career. It is attained by the best members of the legal profession, not by the most gifted politicians. Members of the bench owe nothing to anyone; they are above influence and above suspicion.

When an English lawyer aspires to the bench, he takes examinations to the lowest court. If he passes and is appointed, he must serve a definite length of time there before he is eligible to promotion to a higher court.

Thus, when he seeks promotion, he must pass new examinations, and his judicial record is carefully scanned, with all reversals counting against him.

In this way, England gets courts that are the despairing admiration of Americans. The method is in sharp contrast with our own.

To be sure, many very excellent men—brilliant, conscientious, and completely independent—are to be found in our American courts. But so, alas, are many who are none of these things.

Until we find some way of divorcing the bench from politics, the average level of our courts will continue to be lower than it should be—and we shall get, occasionally, scandals like those of the Seabury investigation.

Isn't it strange how rapidly Christmas slips into the background after all the stress of preparation. Well, it's time to begin thinking about what to do for Christmas next year.

If, as General Johnson is reported to have said, the NRA is as dead as a do, the fess going on now must be over who'll have the eagle for stuffing.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK
PUBLIC WELFARE DEPARTMENTS
(The Bend Bulletin)

THE other day we commented on the remarks made by a Portland attorney regarding competence of county judges to manage the welfare work of their counties. There is now before us the report of the governor's committee on public health and welfare which, we assume, gave the attorney his text. We find nothing in it to justify his findings that the judges were charged with incompetence. Changes are recommended, it is true, but they are simply such changes as naturally come about in the development of a modern and properly organized public welfare department. What the attorney had to say, we fear, was for the purpose of creating prejudice against the report.

The report is made under the provisions of a joint resolution of the legislature of 1933. Fourteen outstanding citizens of the state active and prominent in public welfare and public health affairs served on the commission and gave their approval to the report. The commission has the aid in its work of the American Public Welfare Association and of Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming, of the U. S. public health service. The report deals separately with the two subjects, public health and public welfare.

The commission's proposal with respect to public welfare activities is that a state department to handle this service be set up to consist of a commission, a director and staff. It is recommended that the commission consist of seven unpaid members to be appointed by the governor. The work of the commission would consist of the administration of all welfare functions assumed by the state, including the administration of state institutions and the appointment of superintendents. There would be included in chief the administration of federal unemployment relief and the supervision of mothers' and old age pensions, child welfare work and the promotion of county welfare departments. Many other duties now unassigned or scattered among various agencies would be assigned to the commission.

It is also proposed that county welfare departments be set up in district departments when two or more counties make application and conditions warrant. The board for the management of such a department would consist, it is recommended, of three persons named by the county court or courts, three named by the state department of public welfare and a seventh selected by the county or district medical society. The board would be responsible for the administration of public welfare within the county or district.

Legislation embodying the recommendations of the commission will undoubtedly be presented at the coming session of the legislature. So far as the subject is developed by the report we are ready to say that the legislation should be adopted. It is a measure which will be brought about, the management of public welfare by persons of training and background and thus the greater efficiency and more certain results that will be secured. The plan is one made by experts. We hope that Oregon adopts it.

Since the foregoing was written announcement has been made that Governor-elect Martin's planning board has endorsed the proposal for the creation of a state welfare department. The measure will thus go before the legislature with strong administrative backing. Without doubt such backing will be necessary for success as there will be many whose present privileges and rights will be curtailed by the measure who will fight against it. The real issue, however, will not relate to their rights but to what is best for Oregon and its dependents and delinquents and all other classes of the unfortunate whose welfare has become a state concern. On this basis the measure should pass.

In Portland teachers will give the school board their opinion of the principals under whom they work. Just to make the thing complete the board should get the opinion of the pupils regarding the teachers.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
(Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)
WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Among those who have little time to look back at a crowded year 1934, but prefer to look ahead at 1935 that will be even more eventful, is found the corps of Washington correspondents whose business it is to supply you with exclusive forecasts, interpretation, behind-the-scenes narrative, and gossip. The parade of events here never slows down, which makes it the absorbing panorama it is, especially during the last two or three years.

But even a Washington correspondent with eyes on (and nose in) the future, may be pardoned just a moment to scan quickly back over 1934. It helps give perspective on 1935, helps reassure one that there have been plenty of times when he was out ahead of the parade with "advance dope" that was not only interesting but really important.

Beats on Parade
For instance, "The New Deal in Washington" can look back on Dec. 13 and Dec. 23, 1933, when it was able to give you the first news of the effort to start a Senate munitions inquiry, the investigation which has since reverberated through the government and the nation from the White House down. Other "beats" that cropped up in this column in 1934 (and remember that the "beat" or exclusive story is the manna of life to all good reporters):

Jan. 2—Alcohol Control Administration to lift quota on all Canadian liquor.
Jan. 6—First definite prediction of Roosevelt's plan to take $4,000,000,000 profit for Treasury through dollar devaluation.

Jan. 8—U. S. to make rum in Virgin Islands.
Feb. 20—Government sets out to require standard labeling for canned goods.

March 17—Plot to oust Dr. Willard Thorp, chief of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

March 27—First inside story of Harriman Hoisery Mills labor dispute, which later became a national issue.

First on Wirt Party
April 11—The first and exclusive story of what actually happened at the famous Dr. Wirt dinner party.

April 23—Advance outline of the Federal Housing Administration plan.

May 4—"Roosevelt will have more strength in the next Senate than any president has had since George Washington."

May 31—Secret visit of John Maynard Keynes to White House—and what he told Roosevelt. Later dispatches credit him with influencing New Deal spending program.

June 20—Johnson succumbs to the professors, who move into NRA to find out what's wrong.

Richberg for Johnson
July 6—First inside story of Johnson's decline and the unannounced rise of Richberg.

July 12—Exposure of unofficial postoffice claim of a surplus, later made official claim by Farley.

July 28—Advance outline of Cuban reciprocity treaty.

Aug 14—First compilation of repayable loans among New Deal "expenditures."

Aug. 20—First inside story of Federal Housing Administration mess.

Oct. 15—Roosevelt decides to take unemployed off cash dole and give them work.

Oct. 19—Administration shelves James Harvey Rogers and Professor Warren, the "gold winners."

Oct. 22—NRA to break down code price-fixing and production control as soon as possible.

And Now for '35
Nov. 2—Inside story of why President Hutchins of University of Chicago did not join the New Deal.

Nov. 23—Senate Munitions Committee dead broke; investigators work without pay.

Nov. 30—Internal explosions on National Industrial Recovery Board.

Dec. 1—How close munitions investigation was coming to the administration as White House made apparent move to "take the play away" from Senate.

Dec. 20—Peek deal for cotton to Hitler has fallen through.

It's such things that make up a full year for Washington correspondents, and every one of us is betting that there will be an even fuller measure of excitement in 1935 on which to try the keenness of eyes and the length of noses. Which is all any newspaperman has any right to ask.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine
WHEN you are attacked by a severe cold or by influenza, the first thing to do is to get to bed. The room should be airy and the ventilation should include a free current of air without chilling.

If both ventilation and warmth cannot be obtained at the same time, ventilation is more important, and warmth should be provided by covers on the bed and use of screens to keep off drafts.

The number and weight of bed clothes should not be determined by your decision as to whether you feel cold or warm.

The temperature of the room is a most important factor. Your own temperature can be controlled by use of sponging. Fairly frequent sponging with lukewarm water will take down a fever.

Do not try to feed a cold and crowd your stomach with food, and until you are uncomfortable; neither is it desirable to starve a cold.

Persons with influenza and with colds must have plenty of liquids, taken preferably rather warm, but cold water may be had if you cannot take water in any other way.

Of great importance in such cases is relief from discomfort and pain, and plenty of sleep. To get plenty of sleep and relief from pain it may be necessary for the doctor to prescribe suitable remedies.

Peter's Conversion and Call

Text: John 1:35-42; Mark 1:14-18
The International Union of High School Lesson for Jan. 6.
By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

THE starting point, or turning point, in the career of a great man is always of particular interest. A man destined to play a great part in the founding of Christianity was the apostle Peter. How did he come to know Jesus? What led him to accept the Master's call to discipleship? It is this simple beginning with which our lesson deals. The picture is one of John the Baptist standing with two of his disciples. Looking upon Jesus who was walking nearby, John said, "Behold, the Lamb of God."

The two disciples, who heard John say this, followed Jesus, and Jesus, turning, asked them what they were seeking. The reply was to ask Jesus where He dwelt. To this Jesus said, "Come and see," and the two disciples of John spent that day with him.

One of the two who heard John speak, and who thus came to know Jesus, was Andrew. We do not know a great deal concerning Andrew. So far as we can judge from the New Testament record, he was a plain, patient man, capable of large faith and devotion, but in whose life experience there were no great temptations and no great crises.

So far as the record goes, the most notable thing that Andrew did was to go and find his brother Simon, later called Peter, and bring him to Jesus. Then began that intimate relationship in which Jesus immediately gave Simon a new name, or nickname. "Thou shalt be called, Cephas, which is by interpretation, Peter," or a rock. So much for the record in John's Gospel.

The record in Mark's Gospel is similar and less complete. It is, perhaps, also, inexplicable except when one takes into account the fuller story in John's Gospel. Mark tells us that, after John was
