NEW NASH "400" ON DISPLAY HERE SUNDAY, JUNE 2

This week Nash invades a new price field with the new "400" series—a car described as revolutionary in design and construction to sell in the lower-middle price bracket. The new cars are now on display in the showroom of the Lane Auto company.

With the announcement of its new "400" series, an addition to the company's present line of cars, Nash also introduces the first "Monitor Sealed Motor," perhaps the most compact, simplest and most cleanly designed engine ever used to power a production automobile.

Simplification of engine design has long been a topic for discussion among automotive engineers, and the Nash Motors company has taken definite steps in this direction by developing a power plant that may exert a tremendous influence on future automotive design.

Hundreds of previously essential parts have been eliminated in the new motor's construction, including all exterior manifolding; and because the outside of the engine is so free from gadgets and miscellaneous fittings, all operating parts are easily and quickly accessible. This, it is claimed, greatly reduces engine maintenance costs. Valve grinding, as an example, can be accomplished in far less time than that formerly necessary.

The Nash "400", listing from $675 and up, is priced between the low priced LaFayette and the Nash Advanced Six. Six models—sedan, touring sedan with trunk, victoria, touring victoria with trunk, coupe and rumble seat coupe—make up the line. Wheelbase is 117 inches and the 6 cylinder motor has a rating of 90 horsepower.
