REVOLUTION IN GIN DISTILLING!

"Controlled Condensation"
Developed by Hiram Walker
Assures Uniform Gin Flavor

300-Year-Old Gin Problem Solved
For more than 300 years people have wondered why gin should be smooth one time and not so smooth the next. You yourself, for example, have often mixed your favorite cocktail, using the same proportions as usual, without getting the same results as usual. Neither you nor your recipe is to blame—it's the gin. For, contrary to popular belief, good gin is the most difficult liquor in the world to make! Juniper berries, coriander seed, sweet orange peel and other essential gin ingredients, vary in flavor not only from each other—but also from themselves!

Nobody Need Ever Complain Again!
For 300 years, all that the finest gin formula could do was to control the proportions of the ingredients... but Hiram Walker's "C. C." Process actually controls the flavor variations of these ingredients! It eliminates the danger of any one flavor "running wild" and coming through too strong!

This remarkable "C. C." Process, in use since the opening of Hiram Walker's Peoria distillery, a year ago, enables you to buy, mix, serve and taste a gin so smooth and so perfectly balanced, that nobody need ever complain of variations in flavor. For Hiram Walker has added to the world's most famous formula for flavor, the world's most important process for uniformity.

No Extra Cost to You

Hiram Walker's London Dry Gin is distilled from grain spirits—a very important distinction to remember in gin. And the "C. C." Process is an assurance of flavor perfection day in and day out, in the bottle you buy any day! It will pay you to insist upon this world-famous gin—it costs no more.
