REAL "HERO OF YPRES" UNSUNG.

WHEN Viscount Byng, famous British wartime troop commander, died the other day the newspapers were full of tributes to "the hero of Ypres." It was Byng who commanded in the bloody salient about that Belgian town when the Germans rimmed it with heavy artillery, drenched it with poison gas, and poured the flower of their army into it in a desperate, vain effort to smash their way to the sea.

In all the centuries of fighting the world has seldom if ever seen any more bloody or determined struggles than the one which raged about Ypres. And because we like to personalize all combats, we speak of how Hindenburg tried to take the place, how Haig parried his thrusts, how Byng heroically beat him back; and Byng is and always will be "the hero of Ypres."

Such a way of speaking is natural. We seem to be unable to make a hero out of a whole army. And no army is ever much stronger than the man who leads it; if he cannot diffuse some of his own fire and determination into it, it will fall, no matter how brave and sturdy its individual members may be.

And yet there is a great deal of injustice in this habit of ours. For the real hero of Ypres, like the real heroes of all the other great battles of the World War, was not any bemedaled general. He was a bowed, weary, dirty, nameless private soldier; a man who lived in mud and ate his food, when he got any, in the hideous reek of the battlefield, and endured terror and strain and agony greater than anything even Dante could imagine for his inferno.

This man has never had his just dues. Probably he never will get them, because the only men who can really understand what he went through are the men who stood at his shoulder and suffered with him, and they do not talk much about it.

But we must not forget him when we start talking about the "hero" of this battle or that battle. His were not the mistakes of command. He never sacrificed a company, or a battalion, or a whole army, because of stubborn pride, or misunderstanding of the conditions of modern war, as some of the generals did.

He never sent someone else out to go through a hell that he himself did not have to enter. He was there, in the thick of it, silent and dogged and heroic with a heroism that passes all ordinary understanding.

It is no use trying to learn his name, for there were millions of him. He came from every nation and wore every uniform; he left his bones at Ypres and Cambrai, at Verdun and along the Somme, by the Masurian Lakes and on Gallipoli peninsula.

The glory of war passes him by. The titles and medals go to the generals. But the real hero of the war was and always will be the unsung and inglorious private soldier, who let his superiors send him out to the most horrible of deaths because he had in him something that was brave, loyal and deathless.

SPORTSMANSHIP BOOTS ONE.

THE case of Alabama Pitts is worth more than casual attention.

Alabama Pitts has just got out of Sing Sing prison, in New York, after serving some five years for a holdup. In prison he demonstrated that he is an able athlete; so, on his release, the Albany baseball team in the International League handed him a $200-a-month contract.

Since everyone admits that the one great need of the ex-convict is a decent job that will enable him to go straight, this would seem to be an excellent move all around. But now a man named W. G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Professional Leagues, has ruled that Pitts can't play professional baseball because it would lower the tone of the sport.

What a ruling! The Albany fans want Pitts; the players want him; he wants the job, needs it pathetically. Is his chance to be denied him because some petty bureaucrat has baseball confused with some old maid's sewing circle?

THE LAW'S ABOUT FACE.

ATTY. GEN. HOMER S. CUMMINGS says that the government may be obliged presently to prosecute business concerns which continue price fixing under unofficial codes of fair competition.

This seems to bring us up against one of the queerest and dullest headaches that has afflicted Washington and the business community for some time.

It is only a fortnight or so since the attorney general's men were busily proceeding against business men who violated price fixing codes. Now, by a simple twist of the wrist, they are to reverse their field and start action against men for doing what the government was trying to compel them to do two or three weeks ago!

It would be hard to think of a queerer twist in government policy.

To remember people, wife of Soviet official traces their names in the air with her finger. Judging from the length of most Russian names, the end of a Soviet reception must find her exhausted.

Scientists have invented a "brain wash." The people who write those modern novels could probably stand a vigorous scrubbing.

Mussolini says Italy has "an old and new score" to settle with Abyssinia. The blacks won a war, but it was the old one.

Italian flame throwers leave for Abyssinia. When they begin throwing jets of flame in that climate, the natives will probably complain of the draft.

New Jersey sportsman lands 998-pound shark. The Normande can probably consider itself lucky in not meeting up with the one that got away.

Children of the North are named for the first object the mother sees after the child is born. If that custom was general, there'd be a lot of men called Hospital Bill.

"Green Pastures" will be filmed. Weather reports will probably determine whether the players, on location, will use divers' suits or dust masks.

Seven Americans win sweepstakes prizes. Huey can wipe them off his prospect list.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

OUTSIDE PICKETS
 (Astorian-Budget)

GOVERNOR MARTIN'S use of the state police to drive away pickets from the Bridal Veil and Forest Grove sawmills may draw some criticism from friends of labor who contend he is infringing upon the right to picket, but there is another side to the question.

In both these cases, the workers in the mills involved were not on strike and were not participating in the picketing. All the pickets were from outside and were there to intimidate the workers. There is nothing in the right of peaceful picketing that permits such procedure. If the Bridal Veil and Forest Grove workers themselves were doing the picketing, it would be another matter.

Since state police declare that some of the same men appeared in the picket lines at both these places and that the same men also were involved in the recent picketing of the Coates mill in Tillamook, it looks suspiciously like an organized element in the lumber industry is going to try to prevent the individual settlements of the strike that are the only way to effectively settle it, and which were advocated by the A. F. of L. leadership which has been repudiated.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER

Register-Guard Washington Correspondent
 WASHINGTON, June 15.—Lobbyists seeking to defeat or modify the Economic Security bill took on new hope after the supreme court demolished NRA.

Chief target is the compulsory contributory old age insurance provision, under which employers as well as employees would be taxed at a gradually increasing rate, culminating with 3 per cent on wages and payrolls for each group after 1948.

Certain very large corporations, actively aided by firms which make a business of setting up private retirement and insurance systems, are using propaganda for exemptions.

They would prefer to set up systems of their own, which would be less expensive and less effective, at the same time strengthening their "company unions." Both the Pennsylvania Self-Insurers' Association, composed of such corporations, and the Medical Society of the State of New York, which fears a tendency toward health insurance, have circulated a pamphlet called "Will America Copy Germany's Mistakes?" by a German who purports to show how social insurance failed in the Reich.

Officials of the president's Committee on Economic Security unite in branding the pamphlet a tissue of untruth.

Other groups have issued estimates of cost in which the figures assume astronomical proportions. Some of these figures are obviously exaggerated. Others are guesswork.

Lobbyists seek to persuade senators from the poorer states that their states will have to contribute from 12 to 18 times as much as the cost will actually be.

Backstage efforts are being made to convert Secretary of Labor Perkins to wide, vitiating exemptions which would permit employers to save large sums by ignoring older workers—especially provided for in the bill, place a premium on discharge of workers at relatively early ages.

Lobbying is concentrated on the senate in an effort to amend or block the measure, which passed the house by a huge majority.

No one knows whether to take seriously the recent reports that Chairman Joe Kennedy of the Securities and Exchange Commission is about to resign.

The fact is that Kennedy started telling his friends he was going to quit very soon after his appointment last summer.

These private assurances finally found their way into print. But whether he is really as fed up with the job of regulating Wall Street as he pretends to be is still known only to Joe.

Too Busy Reading to Shoot
 This government is up to all kinds of things that you never hear about. For instance, FERA is using unemployed school teachers to instruct thousands of men and women in backward areas how to read and write.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman tells how the other day he went to Asheville, N. C. to greet nearly 5000 people from the hill regions who had been brought together in ceremonies celebrating their achievement of literacy through FERA.

Speakers from 18 counties testified and gave thanks. One man among them said:
 "I thank God we can all write our own names now and read the Bible. It's been a mighty good thing for us. In our country we ain't had a shooting bee for the last 90 years."

Supporters of the TVA amendments, designed to strengthen TVA against court attacks and kept from the house floor by a 13 to 12 vote of the Military Affairs Committee, are blaming easy-going Chairman John J. McSwain of South Carolina for the tie-up of the measure.

McSwain presumably could have put sufficient heat on at least one recalcitrant democratic member to let the bill out so the house could decide the issue.

But not long previously McSwain had been publicly rebuked by Roosevelt for an error which led to publication of sensational secret testimony by two generals who had ideas about seizing some Canadian territory for air bases in event of war.

Roosevelt's tactlessness at the time seems to have caused McSwain to leave him in a hole.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
 (Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine)

AFTER the World war, a great many soldiers returned to this country infected with a condition called trench mouth.

Despite its name, this disease is not confined to the trenches. It has, in fact, become so widespread that people nowadays catch it from all sources.

The germ that brings on trench mouth is a spiral organism that can be seen under the microscope. When it attacks the mouth, it produces ulcers on the tonsils.

The germ also creeps into the gums, causing bleeding and bad breath; and causing a grayish membrane with little blisters.

If you neglect the condition, it gradually gets worse and results in a swelling of the glands and constant bleeding.

People can contract trench mouth by kissing, or by using the same spoons, forks or unwashed drinking glasses. Fingers, too, may carry the germs to the mouth.

Sometimes the disease is even caught in the offices of careless dentists; but, usually, direct contact or contaminated eating utensils are responsible.

To avoid trench mouth, it is necessary that you take constant and watchful care of your mouth and, particularly, of your teeth and gums. Remember the first signs of infection: persistent bleeding of the gums, and unpleasant odor.

Many of the milder cases can be treated by good dentistry, the use of simple antiseptic solutions, or even a regular cleaning of the teeth. More severe cases may demand special dental preparations, or even treatment of the body generally by injections into the blood.

There is good evidence that cases of trench mouth are increasing in the United States, and there is only one way to combat the disease. Watch for the symptoms and, if they appear, see your dentist or doctor at once, so that he can advise the necessary treatment.

Every individual case should be cured as soon as possible.

Stripping Hop Vines Is Now Under Way

WALTHERVILLE, June 14.—(Special)—Stripping the hop vines is being done in the Waltherville vicinity now, preparatory to smaller vines in the hop socks near the city. The stripping is always done at this time of the growth to keep down the especially large leaves which are so apt to get into the baskets of the pickers.

Mrs. Richard Hart was among those attending the commencement exercises last Monday evening of the E. B. C. when she went in to see Mrs. Alice Harris graduate. Mrs. Harris was formerly Alice Godsey and has visited many times at Waltherville, at times taking part in different programs.

Among those going to Upper Camp Creek Sunday afternoon for the ball game between Waltherville and Camp Creek—Anita Benson, Irene Jensen, Don, Nell and Leyle McArthur, Wister O'Dell, Earl James, Carl Jensen, Bruce Fontaine, Robert Benson, Ervin Fontaine, Tommy Benson, Jim Partridge, John Kickbusch, and Geo. Drury.

Mrs. Iowa Crump was reported on the sick list the first of the week. Several at Waltherville have been reported sick the past few days with severe colds.

Word was received at Waltherville this week of the death of John Rogers of Ord, Nebraska, a pioneer resident of that state and for the past 50 years a man of large interests in the farming and cattle industry in the state. Mr. Rogers visited in Oregon a few years ago with Mrs. Anna Stacy and family at Waltherville and also with relatives here. Mr. Rogers has many friends in this section of Oregon who will be sorry to hear of his death.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Jensen motored to Lorane Sunday to visit Mrs. Mary Lucke, who
