

NORTHWEST STRIKE NEARLY OVER; MANY GO BACK TO WORK

BULLETIN

PORTLAND, Ore., June 29.—(AP)—Consumption of a union agreement which will send 300 sawmill and lumber workers' union members back to work Monday at the Indant-Poulsen mill here was announced tonight at the Labor temple.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 29.—(AP)—A considerably brighter outlook in the Pacific Northwest's lumber industry itself tonight at the close of the eighth week of the strike which at its height involved approximately 35,000 men and a large share of the major lumber operations in Western Oregon and Washington.

The lumber strike mediation board appointed by Secretary of Labor Perkins met today at Seattle and elected Superior Judge Roscoe B. Smith of Seattle chairman. Other members are the Rev. George F. Thompson of Portland, State Sen. John W. Shore of Seattle, and mediators acceptance uncertain.

Lumber operators who have commented on the board protested its appointment and expressed unwillingness to deal with it. However, the board announced hearings will start next week. A. W. Muir, spokesman for woodworking unions of the Northwest, has made no comment on the board.

At least 2300 men, all under union agreement, are scheduled to resume work in the Meyerhauser and Long-Bell mills at Longview, Wash., Monday. Logging operations in the same area, including nearly 1000 employees, were declared ready to start later in the week.

Announcement that negotiations had been completed with the logging department was made late today by A. W. Muir, executive vice-president of the brotherhood of carpenters and joiners, who also reiterated his demand that the men at Longview return to work or forfeit their membership in the union.

Settlement At Aberdeen Likely Muir also announced that another important development was pending at Aberdeen, Wash. He said that his assistant, Don Cameron, from San Francisco, was now in charge of the situation there and that he "expects the quick completion of negotiations to allow 4,000 men to resume work in the Aberdeen area." The old Aberdeen union charter was revoked and a new one has been issued from the union headquarters at Indianapolis, Muir said.

Muir earlier today estimated that 14,000 men, previously on strike, had returned to work under union agreement within the past few weeks. The West Coast Lumbermen's association at Seattle placed its estimate at between 4,000 and 5,500.

When questioned concerning the difference between his settlement plan, involving 50 cents an hour minimum, a 40-hour week and provision for collective bargaining, and that offered by several Portland employers as well as operators in other cities, Muir said that the 50-cent bracket varied considerably in the number of men included.

"Some plants have only from 18 to 22 per cent at the minimum scale; others up to 50 per cent," he said. "The plans differ in that the union provides a definite limit on the lower wage brackets."

Muir Satisfied On Wages He said the 14,000 men who assertedly have resumed work under union agreement are receiving the highest wages ever paid in the lumber industry.

In Tacoma and Portland, where mill reopened earlier this week without union sanction, the situation was quiet today, most of the plants observing the usual Saturday holiday. It was indicated a more complete reopening was planned for Monday, however. About 900 men were at work in non-agreeing plants in Tacoma yesterday and slightly more at the 100 in Portland. Several hundred non-union loggers resumed their jobs in the Bellingham, Wash., area. The day passed without incident.

boys for the first two weeks is practically filled, it is stated, and boys who wish to go at this time should be registered by July 2. Those wishing to attend the second session starting July 21 should register by the end of the week, July 6. Boys may attend one or all of the periods, as they desire.

Camp Lucky Boy will offer practically every form of outdoor sports and craft known to scouting. It is directed by H. B. Sallee, local scout executive, and James E. Monroe, executive at Salem, who will have charge of the project this year. An excellent swimming pool will not only offer facilities for swimming and diving, but will be used for demonstration and training in life-saving as well. Adjacent to the river is a wide parade ground, which will also be fully equipped for such sports as baseball, track events, archery, marksmanship, signaling, and many others.

Particular attention will be paid to scout work for merit badges. Scouts will receive training in angling, archery, astronomy, bird study, botany, canoeing, camping, carpentry, forest conservation, cooking, first aid, hiking, Indian lore, leathercraft, metal work, pathfinding, personal health, public health, reptile study, surveying, weather observation, wood carving, and zoology.

The Cascade mountains offer a wide range of hikes, from short jaunts from camp to overnight trips that take the more adventuresome up on to thrilling snow covered peaks. All manner of wild life may be observed first hand in this region. It is pointed out.

"Although practically all the scouts' time will be spent out in the open, every precaution will be taken in the preparation of food. The cooking and dining buildings are all screened and refrigeration and sewage disposal systems of utmost efficiency have been prepared. Water is brought down from a cool, sparkling spring back up in the hills by means of a special pipe line.

"Scouts will be given a program of work balanced with helpful play that they could get in no other way," states Mr. Turnbull. "There will be days of useful activity in the woods and in hills, training in good sportsmanship, helpfulness and self-reliance, and the comradeship of the right kind of playmates, all things that will serve to return the scout a better, stronger and happier boy."

Registration may be made at the scout headquarters in Eugene or any of the other cities maintaining offices, or information may be obtained from scoutmasters and executives.
