LETTER TELLS SAD STORY OF FLOODS AND DESTRUCTION

The floods, tornadoes, winds, and dust which swept over the southwest during the early summer made life miserable for the inhabitants of the stricken area, according to word received by Mrs. Lulu Gaddy, Rt. 3, Box 478, Eugene, from her niece in McCook, Nebraska. The niece, Mrs. Mildred Wilcox, writes graphically of the havoc and loss of life caused by floods and tornadoes in Nebraska and adjoining states.

Among events reported by Mrs. Wilcox were the finding of a dead cow in one of the beds of the house following the high water, and the heroic feat of a father who swam three miles in a raging torrent to save his five-year-old daughter whom he carried on his back. Many refugees found a temporary haven in the tree tops until rescued by aircraft.

At the high mark, the water reached a height of nearly two feet in buildings a mile from any river, leaving in its wake mud and trash which ruined dwelling houses and their contents. Drowned bodies were being taken from the swollen streams each day. To climax the destruction, a tornado followed in the wake of the flood, the letter writer puzzling as to where the dust came from, as "there was three inches of rain the night before and rain and water was all around."

The letter was written on June 10, long after the floods; but, said Mrs. Wilcox, things were still in confusion and it would be sixty days before regular train service could be resumed.

IDLE BANK FUNDS REACH NEW ALL TIME RECORD PEAK

WASHINGTON, July 1.—(AP)—Idle bank funds touched a towering all-time peak tonight, surrounded by a bitter dispute over methods of preventing their possible transition into a runaway credit boom. Closely allied, the treasury's vast gold hoard climbed again to a new high, too, some economists thought, to the receipt of the last shipments of that metal acquired in the government's recent sale to the defense of the franc.

Capital for which the member banks of the federal reserve system could find no acceptable borrowers stood at a point officially estimated at a little more than $2,500,000,000. All reserves on deposit at the reserve banks totaled $5,025,000,000. The gold stocks aggregated $9,109,000,000. Both figures showed big increases for the past week.

Meanwhile the omnibus banking bill, by which the administration hopes to provide a strongly centralized control over the process of turning the $2,500,000,000 excess reserves into bank loans, finally was approved by a senate banking sub-committee and neared a parliamentary battle royal on the senate floor.

Of the $5,229,000,000 reserve deposits, approximately one half cannot be touched by the member banks. They are required by law to keep a percentage of their own deposits on deposit with the reserve banks. The other half—the excess above such reserve requirements—they may tap at any time. Most economists agree that, once the snowball of a credit boom starts rolling, the excess $2,500,000,000 would be multiplied by ten in credit. On this basis, the excess reserves would furnish the source of $25,000,000,000 in credit or some $2,500,000,000 more than all the combined loans and investments of the member banks during the hey day of the 1929 boom.

The banking bill, the administration contends, would provide checks assuring an orderly transformation from excess reserves to credit and would establish controls that could be used to prevent a repetition of the disaster of October, 1929. The bill is intended to do so by giving the federal board broad powers to increase the percentages of required reserves and thus reduce excess reserves. Prominent from this point of view, also, is the authority it would give a committee nominated by the board to order the reserve banks to sell or buy government bonds at any time, thus again affecting the available cash resources of the banks. In numerous other ways, the hotly-controverted measure would tighten Washington's grip on the banking system.

PORTLAND MARKET NOT VERY ACTIVE PORTLAND, July 1.—(AP)—Poultry markets were showing weaker. Heavy birds were becoming out of season and were being stored. Some short-weights continued in small broilers, although an attempt to push up the selling price met with little success. Butter and butterfat prices were unchanged. Quality eggs were becoming more scarce but no change in price was made over the week-end. A fair supply was still to be had. Both potatoes and onions were slower, with a large amount of potatoes coming in from Yakima.
