EASY LIFE ON THE RANCH.

THE easterner who takes a vacation in the great open spaces of the west, seeking a taste of the life of the cowboy and the plainsman, seems to be a tough chap to satisfy.

I. H. Larom, president of the Western Dude Ranchers' Association, says that members of the association are having a hard time providing all the conveniences of home for their guests and at the same time meeting their demand for a taste of real, old-fashioned ranch life.

The easterner, it develops, wants his room with bath and music with his meals; so some dude rancher will give them to him, only to discover that the guest is dissatisfied, on the ground that the west is no longer wild and woolly.

The rich man who sets out to get back to nature very often makes a spectacle of himself in this way. He plans to "rough it" in an Adirondack hunting lodge, for instance, and then equips the lodge more elaborately than the ordinary suburban home is equipped—and wonders why he is missing something.

The private bath is a blessing—but don't try to take it with you when you are getting back to nature.

INTERNATIONAL KINDNESS.

THE standards of morality in international politics sometimes seem to be down on the approximate level of a Chicago gang war in the dry era.

It is reported from Rome, for instance, that leading European powers have reached a formula for settling the differences between Italy and Abyssinia.

This settlement—if preliminary reports are correct—will consist of a general descent on Abyssinia by France and England, as well as Italy. The Ethiopian empire under these plans would be split three ways—all, of course, in the name of civilization. Italy would have the privilege of civilizing one part, France would civilize another and England—a past master at the game of bringing enlightenment to backward peoples who have valuable possessions—would civilize the third.

The whole business has a striking resemblance to the deliberations of a gang of strong-arm men laying plans for the hold-up of a factory payroll. Only the strong-arm men don't bother to talk about "civilization."

A "SUPER AMBASSADOR."

IT is rumored about London that Ramsey MacDonald, until recently prime minister of Great Britain, will be sent to the United States as a sort of "super ambassador," to help Britain attain a closer cooperation with the United States on important phases of international policy.

Whether the report be true or not, it at least emphasizes the growing extent to which England and America are finding cooperation advisable.

Neither American policy nor English policy in relation to China, for example, stands by itself. Each nation's course necessarily is conditioned to a large extent by the other nation's course.

Regardless of the numerous points of difference between them, these two great English-speaking communities can do a tremendous service to the world at large by joining hands occasionally. These proposals for a "super ambassador" recognize the fact.

"STATE OF THE NATION"

WHAT can be said of the "state of the nation" at this writing except that it is a state of uncertainty? The New Deal has run out of aces. In the "tax the rich" program, Mr. Roosevelt seems to have reached the stage of "drawing to a flush." In the last week or two the Republican party has shown signs of life but so far it has shined in nothing but white chips. Radicals from all sides are attempting a third-party get-together in Chicago but so far they have shown nothing but deuces.

There are different symptoms of industrial recovery everywhere in the United States. How far this recovery has been due to emergency measures instituted by the present administration, nobody can say. Nothing has been accomplished in the way of permanent industrial and social readjustments—with the doubtful exception of the Wagner bill. The administration's security program may be accomplished before worn-out congressmen hike for rivers and lakes, but it is becoming more and more plain that little of far-reaching importance will be accomplished prior to determination of public desires in the election of 1936.

Repeated adverse decisions have outlawed the New Deal program of experiment. The New Deal faces the problem of coming back to the people with specific proposals for constitutional and governmental change, if it is to continue its course. Between action and reaction lies the future course. It is too early to predict the doom of the Roosevelt administration. It has lost greatly in public prestige. It is a question whether the slow-moving five billion dollar works program will purchase votes or merely add to the prevailing tide of suspicion and discontent.

Between a temporary partial prosperity and painstaking, painful reform lies the future choice. The most alarming feature of the situation is the indecision of the administration, apparently preoccupied with the politics of holding office. No permanent program has been produced for solving the one great problem which is unemployment. Till it is solved there will be no rest.

Ajax McGurk views all this constitutional controversy with perplexity. He questions if the constitution represents what Americans will stand or stand for in the final test.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

THE NEW HIGHER TAX PLAN IS A FARCE

(The Grants Pass Courier)
 BIGGER and better taxes are coming, take President Roosevelt's word for it. The president's suggestions are already being whipped into shape for presentation to the national congress.

There is a plan to add them onto the nuisance tax measure which has passed the house and is now before the senate, and do it this week before the nuisance taxes shall expire on June 30.

There is another plan to extend the "temporary" nuisance taxes extended twice before, for another "temporary" 30 to 90 days and give the congress more time to get the president's share-the-wealth taxes into the bill without rushing things so.

However they do it, the new higher inheritance and gift levies, higher taxes on big incomes and graduated corporation taxes will be passed, all right. Their effect will be to raise $340,000,000 a year, which at one time would have been considered a staggering sum.

Is it a staggering sum today? Listen to what Senator Borah said about it today:

"This thing is rapidly becoming a farce," the Idaho senator declared. "We passed a bill yesterday to spend three times $340,000,000."

And so they did, the Bankhead farm tenant bill. But even that bill was not a circumstance to the great public works bill which became a law such a short time ago and appropriated more than FOUR BILLION DOLLARS for work-relief spending.

Ten bills like the president's share-the-wealth tax bill being debated in congress today wouldn't pay for the work-relief appropriation.

Take ten times what the new tax plan seeks to withdraw from the wealthy men of America and America won't have any wealthy men.

And when America doesn't have any wealthy men any more, with the work-relief appropriation and the Bankhead appropriation and all of the other appropriations still to be paid for, who do you suppose will be left to tax in order to make it up?

You and I, brother, you and I.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER

(Register-Guard Washington Correspondent)
 WASHINGTON, July 8.—This is a story of how a joke was played on the New Dealers, of the way a congressman can most effectively guarantee himself a miserable future in Washington, and of the explosion of the theory that there is any such thing as a progressive Republican congressman from the east.

The hero of it all is Congressman Ralph O. Brewster of Maine. A former governor with a reputation as a foe of the "power trust."

Brewster is now celebrated as the man who precipitated a House investigation by charging that Thomas G. Corcoran of REC had threatened stoppage of Maine's famous Passamaquoddy project in case Brewster didn't vote for the administration's proposal to dissolve the biggest public utility holding companies.

The story of how Brewster reached his present position is remarkable and instructive.

It demonstrates the way things happened to congressmen in the history-making struggle between the administration and the "power trust" lobby over the holding company bill, in which the New Dealers and the congressional progressives had taken Brewster to their bosoms.

Fought Insult Rule

Some years ago Samuel Insull went to Maine with the intent of adding it to his empire. His agents obtained passage of a legislative bill permitting export of electric power from the state. Brewster, as governor, vetoed the bill.

Thereafter, Brewster ran for the Senate and was defeated by the power and other interests. But last year he was elected to the House over a Democrat described as a "100 per cent power trust man."

Working closely with Brewster in his campaigns was Ernest H. Gruening, once crusading editor of the progressive Portland (Me.) Evening News.

When Brewster came to Washington Gruening, now director of the division of territories and insular possessions, introduced him to other liberals and soon the congressman became a popular figure at gatherings of New Dealers, who welcomed the strange spectacle of an eastern Republican congressman who professed to agree with their progressive views.

He became the associate of independent congressmen, joining in their secret councils which discussed strategy on the holding company bill.

Welcomed As Liberal

Brewster was recommended to Roosevelt as a progressive who merited support in the next campaign and could be counted on as a New Dealer in current congressional fights.

Brewster seemed pleased, especially so when he was allowed to work with Corcoran, co-author of the holding company bill and one of the most active and effective brain trusters behind the scene on legal aspects of the Passamaquoddy power project, the administration's big work-relief award to Maine.

Progressives first began to worry about Brewster a few days ago, when the Bland-Copeland merchant marine bill was up. They opposed it, labelling it a steal for the ship operators and shipbuilders.

Brewster, a member of the merchant marine committee, signed a minority report exhorting the bill, but merely voted present on the vote to report it out. A time when Moran of Maine and Wearin of Iowa, leaders in the fight, expected him to be introducing amendments to the bill, they found Brewster was out of town.

Turns On Progressives

Votes on the holding company bill followed almost immediately. Again Brewster was missing. A friend, advised by administration agents, found him and escorted him to the Capitol.

That friends and many others in the galleries gasped in amazement as the famous foe of the "power trust" marched up the aisle with Republicans and conservative Democrats in a vote against substitution of the Senate bill dissolving big holding companies.

Reaction against Brewster among his friends of the last few months set in immediately. These progressives say Corcoran had merely told Brewster that if he wouldn't support the administration against the "power trust" he couldn't be trusted to participate in plans for the Passamaquoddy project.

Now For The Fun

So now a supposedly impartial investigation of administration and utility lobbying is supposed to be staged by a rules committee which voted almost unanimously against the holding company "death sentence."

An anti-administration Tammany Irishman named O'Connor, chairman of the committee, is pitted against a brilliant young Irishman named Corcoran and it will be a grand fight.

And of course Brewster's turn-about is a joke on the New Dealers. But the bitter hatred of progressives for Brewster, indicates small future happiness here for Mr. Brewster and grave doubt whether he will enjoy the joke.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
 Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

YOU may turn up your nose at the suggestion of having corned beef and cabbage as the main dish at a formal dinner party, but never hesitate to prepare this dish for your husband whenever he wants it.

Boiled cabbage, experiments show, is of great value in the diet. The cost is not great, and the food value is considerable. And that goes for boiled carrots, too. Both serve, also, as a source of roughage.

Of course, the experiments with boiled cabbage brought out the fact that this vegetable loses about 80 per cent of its vitamin C. But it still retains practically all of its vitamin A.

This point was brought out in a test in which one group of animals got fresh cabbage, another group got boiled cabbage, and a third got cod liver oil. It was found that the animals getting boiled, and those getting fresh, cabbage grew in just about the same way.

This applies also to carrots in which the vitamin A is considerable in amount and is not affected by boiling. The vitamin A in these two vegetables, whether fresh or boiled, is greater than that of ordinary cow's milk, but less than that to be found in butter.

Raw cabbage and raw spinach rank with orange and lemon juice and with tomatoes as among the richest sources of vitamin C. However, it is fairly well established that cabbage is not a good source for vitamin C when boiled.

Ordinary cabbage also provides 1.4 per cent of its weight as protein, 12 per cent as fat, and 5.5 per cent as carbohydrate. The fuel value of cabbage per pound is 130 calories.
