LEAD WAY TO BUDGET CURE.

OUT of all the squabbling about the "soak the rich" tax projected for congressional consideration, there should at least come forth an excellent educational program on the general subject of government finances.

On the one hand we have Michigan's Senator Vandenberg declaring that the program as the president has outlined it is "inadequate, incomplete, and pathetically superficial."

It is his idea that Congress should take a few months off to think things over and then come back with a plan that would not only boost the tax on the very wealthy, but would increase the takings from citizens of more modest means.

On the other hand, we have the well-to-do Mr. Charles H. Sabin, Jr., appearing as the mouthpiece for a group of wealthy men who feel that the administration should simultaneously reduce income taxes and balance the budget; and before anyone can remark that this would be a good trick if you could do it, they hasten to suggest an all-inclusive federal sales tax.

Just what will eventually be done with the program, subjected as it will be to strong pressures from diametrically opposite directions, is something for the seventh son of a seventh son to worry about. But it should at least set people thinking about some of the fundamentals of government finance problems.

To begin, we might reach the point of understanding that in any scheme of tax reform we can't have it both ways. A reduction of income taxes would be a blessing, and so would a completely balanced federal budget; but some of our publicists and statesmen have been agitating for both things at the same time, and this educational program might convince them that this just naturally can't be done.

Beyond that, however, the discussion should focus attention on the fact that one of the greatest needs of the hour is the restoration of order to government finances.

A budget which goes unbalanced for a year or two, in a country as potentially rich as the United States, need not worry anyone. A budget which is permitted to stay unbalanced for year after year, while high officials evade the subject of tax revision by relying hopefully on a business revival, is about as ominous a portent as a government can face.

We seem at last to be coming to grips with this problem. If the coming row over the advisability or otherwise of soaking the rich arouses us to the importance of a balanced budget, it will be one of the most useful developments of the year.

SOCIETY'S PLAYHOUSE?

IT is probably a good thing for the cause of art that Congress has voted a federal incorporation for a national theater. This organization, a private institution dedicated to "art for art's sake," will strive to present drama of the highest type and to stir up new interest in the theater among the public generally.

Such aims are of a type that no one can fail to commend; yet it is with a faint feeling of misgiving that one reads that the incorporators are to quote a United Press dispatch—"45 social leaders."

If a national theater enlists the aid of working dramatists, producers and actors, it can be an excellent thing. If, however, it merely serves as an excuse for making a handful of social leaders think that they are being useful and artistic, it can be pretty dismal. It is to be hoped that this latter pitfall will be avoided.

CARELESSNESS AT CROSSINGS.

THE grade crossing accident is one of the leading contributors to our auto traffic death list. And the thing every driver should remember is that in most cases such accidents are the fault of the motorists themselves.

Figures compiled by the Pennsylvania Railroad System show that during the first four months of this year, one-third of all grade crossing accidents occurred when motorists drove into the sides of trains. And in exactly half of these cases, the train involved was either standing still or moving at a snail's pace of less than 10 miles an hour.

The blithe carelessness with which some drivers approach railroad crossings could not be illustrated more clearly. It is sheer folly to drive up to any crossing without making absolutely sure that no train is in sight; but to blunder against a train that is actually on the crossing at the time is the next thing to simple suicide.

Cleveland deaf and dumb man divorced mute wife because she talked in sign language he didn't understand. Why didn't he muffle her with boxing gloves?

If that impending coal strike begins and lasts until winter, coal peddlers may be asking, "One lump or two?"

American glass workers see better times ahead. Of course, they might be looking through their rose-colored product.

Aged Xenia, O., man saves life by leaping on train. Others have added a few years by hopping on a wagon.

Youth will be obeyed, but only if the order was given the water during childhood.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

THE CHANCELLOR (Pendleton East Oregonian)
CHANCELLOR KERR, who was honored here yesterday, is completing 50 years of work in the field of education and though still in robust health, wishes to retire as he feels that he has done his part. He has done this with success and distinction, as everyone knows and he is entitled to time for relaxation. It is a safe guess, however, that Dr. Kerr will not be idle even when he withdraws from his strenuous duties. A man of his energy and temperament cannot be happy as a loafer. As a matter of fact such a man usually enjoys hard work and that is one reason why he succeeds so well. In the case of Dr. Kerr the results attained may be attributed to energetic work plus a fine personality and natural executive ability. It is not often all of those qualities are combined in one individual, but when the combination exists the man becomes a real leader.

Fortunately for Oregon most of Chancellor Kerr's work was done in this state. All parts of the state and all people have profited by his ability and his zeal. Some people do not realize this and will never know the extent of his service, but that does not change the fact.

The chancellor is to be congratulated upon his 50 years of service and so are the people of Oregon. There are men and women all over the state, all over the nation and in many foreign lands who have found inspiration in his leadership and they would not have found it had it not been there.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER

Register-Guard Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON, July 13.—Seldom does a brain trust's wife stride into the limelight. The University of Wyoming has reason to wish one never did. The university's trouble is Miss Caroline F. Ware, who threatens to sue because she was hired to teach at its summer school and later was advised she couldn't be employed because it had been learned she was married.

Miss Ware is the wife of Dr. Gardiner C. Means of AAA, an economist who has made some important studies for the New Deal and who co-authored with A. A. Berle on "The Modern Corporation and Private Property."

A former professor of history at Vassar, she has been working here for the consumer sections of the NRA and National Emergency Council.

The position of the university is that the trustees made a rule that it couldn't employ any married women, that it had no way of knowing Caroline wasn't single, and that the policy had been kept in force to spread employment among more families.

Listen to This Barrage!

Miss Ware, promising to contest cancellation of her contract, has dumped a wagonload of arguments on the university president, Dr. A. G. Crane, to show that such policy—which some corporations have been known to adopt—is poisonous, both to education and American institutions.

From the feminist standpoint, her protest is one of the great documents of the decade. She says: "The university is supposed to be an educational institution, not a work-relief organization. The trustees' duty is to select the best teachers available.

"Education is prostituted when university positions are turned into jobs to be held for the income derived instead of jobs to be done with reference to the best interests of the students. Is the university, when it trains women for teaching and other professional positions, condemning them to lives of celibacy or wasting the state's money training them for positions from which its policy would exclude them?"

"The rule is a move to relegate women to the position to which Hitler has openly consigned them in Germany and to which 'American Hitlers' are pushing them, under cover of 'emergency action.'

"The trustees cast aside a long tradition under which Wyoming was the first state to adopt woman suffrage, elect a woman governor and choose many women for high positions. And are the trustees trying to place women in the role of child-bearing for future wars, as in Italy and Germany, or attacking marriage by prescribing single blessedness for all who have any potential usefulness other than child bearing?"

And if the university laughs that off, says Miss Ware, she will be in Wyoming with her lawyer. The National Women's Party and some other women's groups are supporting her.

Honest Injun, Don't!

The Donald R. Richbergs are taking the summer easy at a cottage on Rehoboth Beach, Del., about four hours from Washington. The former "assistant president" will write a couple of magazine articles and do little else but plan resumption of law practice in the fall, probably with offices in Washington and Chicago. Richberg had hardly arrived before he was accosted respectfully by a native in the Henlopen hotel, who said: "I want to shake your hand and ask you one question: 'What do you think of General Johnson?'"

Richberg stammered: "I think he's a swell guy." The native thanked him heartily and bowed himself away.

New Freud in New Deal

In case you didn't think there was any link between the New Deal and Dr. Sigmund Freud, the big psycho-analysis complex and wish-fulfillment man of Vienna—Baby Thomas Freud Wiener, a great-grand-nephew of the old gentleman, was recently born to Esther and Frederick Bernays Wiener, the latter being a grand-nephew of Freud as well as a prominent attorney under Secretary Ickes, lately representing the Interior Department in its Virgin Islands troubles.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEN

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

AS good as sun bathing and sea bathing may be for you, they can also do considerable harm, if they are not taken with the caution that is necessary for health.

Sun bathing provides the skin with light, heat and ultraviolet rays. It also submits the skin to the motion of open air. Sea bathing adds the stimulus of sea water.

But you must begin to use these gradually. It is not safe to plunge into the water immediately on arriving at the seashore and then to sit for hours in the sun.

Children, who are under normal in health and people who are convalescing from disease must become gradually accustomed to the altered conditions at the seashore before they are permitted to bathe in the sea, sit in the sun or even to paddle about near the shore.

There is some reason to believe that salt water produces more reaction on the skin than ordinary water. Cold water is a stimulant.

People, who are in excellent health, after plunging in the sea are likely to have a favorable reaction. For those who are not in good health, bathing in the sea at the usual temperature of the water may produce some shock and a too rapid cooling of the body, with a resultant strain on the nervous system and the circulation of the blood.

A sun bath after bathing in the sea is often helpful to health, but there are certain conditions to be observed. The exposure should be gradual at first.

Sun bathing in a wet bathing suit is not free from danger. Delicate children and grown-ups in less than normal health should be sheltered immediately after bathing in the sea and preferably provided with a hot drink and a hot foot bath.

People react to sunshine in different ways. What is beneficial to one may be harmful for another. You should remember that the sunshine at the seaside is more brilliant and intense than in the city where clouds and smoke tend to modify its strength.

It is also good to know that bloods are more susceptible to the sun than are brains.

Overexposure to sunlight yields varying degrees of sunburn. There may be an actual lowering of the resistance of the body after too much sun bathing. Instead of the increased resistance following sun bathing that is properly administered.

With the right control of conditions, sea bathing and suitable sunshine thereafter should lead to an improvement of appetite and digestion, a feeling of well-being and cheerfulness, and an increase in the body's tone. Usually also there is a benefit to sleep so that one feels much better after a sea bath and sunshine than before.
