COURT SUPREMACY AID IN CHANGES

clear acts of congress unconstitutional. Thus, Justice Holmes has written, "The United States constitution would not come to an end if the court lost its power to declare acts of congress void."

However, any such change entails significant modifications in our theory of separation of governmental powers and on the basis of the long time record of the United States supreme court, I think that we as a people should be most hesitant in checking the powers of that court.

Nevertheless, there is a great deal of merit in the criticism of those who claim that the present power of judicial review results in a great deal of waste.

Obviously, no business could succeed if it purchased expensive machinery, installed it and started to run it before it determined whether or not that machinery would manufacture the goods for which it was purchased.

In a sense that is what is now done in this country in regard to legislative machinery. It costs millions of dollars to put important federal legislation into operation.

Yet our system permits the supreme court to declare such legislation unconstitutional and thus in effect wipe it off the books at a great financial loss, not only to the government, but to business men who have endeavored to adjust to it. It has been suggested that one way to prevent such a waste would be to create a separate department of the supreme court whose sole task

CANDID SHOT IS THE THING!

It would be to pass upon constitutional questions involved in major legislation prior to its final enactment.

A proposal somewhat similar was submitted to the constitutional convention in 1787 by Randolph of Virginia and rejected by the framers of the constitution. The Randolph plan proposed to associate a certain number of the judges with the executive in the exercise of a revisionary power over laws passed by Congress.

However, that is not exactly the same plan as the proposal for a department to pass judgment upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress in advance.

Some of the arguments advanced against the proposal for advisory opinions are that such a plan would be an encroachment upon the doctrine of judicial review and the independence of the court.

This argument is of questionable validity because under the proposal the court would have the same power that it now has to determine the constitutionality of acts of Congress, but when requested by the executive or by Congress it would determine the matter of constitutionality before the law is put into effect.

It is contended that such a proposal would in effect turn that department of the court into a legislative drafting bureau, but obviously this would not be the case because the decisions would not vary in form from those now given.

At the present time the court does not tell Congress how to make a certain act constitutional, but rather tells Congress why a certain act is unconstitutional.

It is also claimed that the advisory opinion plan would be undesirable because decisions would be rendered upon the basis of hypothetical cases, thus varying from the present well-established practice of determining constitutionality upon the basis of actual litigation.

This objection is of doubtful validity because many cases now are purely test cases of little consequence as far as the interests of the party litigants are concerned when viewed in light of the major constitutional questions involved.

The advisory opinion plan, on the other hand, would give the court greater latitude in rendering its constitutional decisions, in that all features of a given act could be decided as to their constitutionality while at the present time the facts of a given case often involve only a part of an act and so its constitutionality is decided piece-meal.

Perhaps a more valid objection would be that the proposal would involve a task impossible of performance by a separate department of the court, if all, or even most, of the acts of congress were to be submitted to the court in advance, let alone the acts of state legislatures, which might possibly be in conflict with the federal constitution.

If such a plan is to be feasible, it would have to be limited in some way so that only major legislation would be submitted to the court in advance.

If the power of judicial review is finally curtailed, the chief reason for such action will be the dissatisfaction of large numbers of our people with the delay, uncertainty, and waste entailed in the present procedure.

A perfected advisory opinion plan might prove to be an effective way of retaining the court's right to exercise the doctrine of judicial review and at the same time make possible the speedy adjustment of major legislation to the constitution.

If the principle of such a plan is sound and desirable, the mechanics for its operation should not prove difficult of solution.

More than 5,000,000 copies of Ethelbert Nevin's "The Rosary" have been sold.

Busily engaged in their own pursuit of happiness, these three children were apparently unaware of the presence of a camera. A "candid" camera shot, it is the kind of picture which took the prize in an international contest and is shown to give amateur photographers in the region competing in the Register-Guard snapshot contest a hint as to the sort of study which takes the judges' eyes.

Thousands Spent in July Construction

New and repair building permits totaling $17,390 were given by the city engineer's office during the month of July. The greater part of this amount, $9,610 was to be placed in the construction of four new buildings. The remainder was for residence and store repairs. Permit fees collected from the issue of building permits, electrical licenses and permits, sign permits, blue printing and miscellaneous permits amounted to $273.78 for the month.

IT'S AS SMOOTH AS OLD BRANDY

"I've printed lots of flossy words about liquor, but here's ONE gin that dares stand or fall on its own flavor. Not mixed, understand—but just as it comes out of the bottle. Of course, you and I, and millions of us country-wide KNOW that Old Mr. Boston is the swellest, smoothest, grandest-tasting gin—STRAIGHT—that ever slaked a thirst. But lots of folks don't know it's priced low. That's THE miracle... the low price."

SNAPSHOT CONTEST TO BE PEPPED UP

Register-Guard office by 4 p. m. Wednesday of each week. Each Monday's paper will carry a list of the pictures selected, and the entrants must send or bring the negative into this office in order for the pictures to be enlarged for the full page showing on Sunday.

This will result in much more beautiful reproduction pictures, permitting the detail and lighting effect to show properly. The negatives will be carefully filed and will be returned intact to the owners as soon as the contest is over.

Otherwise the rules are the same, no picture may be entered which is taken by a professional, or prior to April 28, 1935. All pictures must be titled in the proper class designated on the entry blank which is published from time to time in this paper. Anyone may enter as many snaps in as many of the classifications as he desires.

Although "human interest" is the main basis of judging, attention to the fundamentals of photography is necessary to insure a prize-winning snap. A picture which is out of focus, no matter how attractive, will not win. Arrangement and lighting effects are important.

The four prize winners each week will be entered in the district finals where cash prizes will be awarded. Four pictures will be selected to be sent to the showing in Washington, D. C., at the Newspaper National Snapshot Awards to represent this region. Over $10,000 in cash prizes will be given away at that time.

There is one thing about this contest that has a strong appeal to the amateur. No special skill or experience is required. There is no limit to picture taking possibilities in this region, if snapshotters keep their eyes open. The car is the place for the camera on that week-end expedition. It is amazing how many excellent picture chances are encountered even on that Sunday afternoon drive.

The four classes are again listed to give hints of picture types:

1. CHILDREN AND BABIES: Any picture in which the principal interest is a child or children, at play, asleep, laughing, "working," close-ups, in everyday clothes or in costume.

2. SPORTS, HOBBIES, RECREATION, ASSOCIATIONS, ACTION: Baseball, golf, tennis, motor boating, canoeing, sailing, beach fun, airplane, fishing, animal pictures, pets, gardening, farming, carpentering, etc.

3. SCENES AND STILL LIFE: Landscapes, marine views, city streets, travel or country scenes, architecture, interiors, "still life," pictures of art objects, curios, cut flowers, fruit, etc.

4. INFORMAL PORTRAITS: Group pictures, close-ups, or full figure of a person or persons except pictures in which the principal interest is a child or children.

Just reading through these classes should give some ideas for interesting pictures. Also study the prize winners each week and follow suit. Remember, too, with a single snapshot you may win fame and fortune.

The Carl R. Baker Film Shop and the Modern Engraving company are cooperating in staging this contest in this district.

Pictures showing shots which have won prizes in similar contests will be shown from time to time as suggestions to amateurs here of the sort of picture which takes the "money."
