INSULT AND WAR.

THE short exchange of diplomatic pleasantries—and unpleasanties—occasioned by the recent Bremen flag episode at times has been difficult to fathom. Why the United States government should be asked to beg the forgiveness of the German nation for the alleged humiliating discourtesies shown the Nazi emblem seems unanswerable especially when those asserted "unfortunate" incidents were so evidently begged by the masters of the German liner.

The Bremen, it seems, was holding open house for "communists," collecting 10 cents each from those who wished to board the ship and witness the advantages wrought by Nazi efficiency—a veritable sideshow, playing to and inviting the curiosity of the crowd. The officers of the Bremen had been warned of the threatened demonstration, but had replied that they could handle any situation that presented itself. The New York police, aware of the probable consequences of a Nazi-Riot meeting, placed more than a half hundred riot squad members on duty. Even after alleged communists had circulated handbills calling all Jews and Catholics to the waterfront to engage in a demonstration against Hitler and Hitlerism, officials of the giant steamer would make no move to guard against any possible violence. Seemingly as entranced by the click of the turnstile as the owner of a major league baseball team they accepted dimes from the mischief-bent anti-Nazis who streamed on board.

Must a government of 130,000,000 persons be called upon to answer for the squabble which follows the "Hey, Rube" of a carnival bawler? We think not.

Yet, it is such incidents as that on the Bremen which cause the war spirit to flame. Patriots sometimes are super-sensitive when what they term the "honor" of their chosen land is at stake. Soco and Vanzetti would never have made a headline if they had been United States citizens. Peace-loving Americans, who, in a recent nationwide straw ballot, voted that they would refuse to bear arms regardless of cause, would find themselves seeking conscription, even as the Ethiopian women are doing, if the national pride had been put on the defensive. War-promoting propagandists have always known and appreciated the rapidity with which the most conscientious objector will return the blow which shakes the chip from his shoulder.

When all peoples have been brought to understand that international haughtiness does not beget international friendliness, that belligerent patriotism is not a prime virtue, that national pride might well give way, in some instances, to reciprocal concessions; then, perhaps, the war method may become obsolete. Until that time, little more than pale pink will be needed to infuriate the bulls of international diplomacy.—M. B.

THE WORK OF THE PLANNERS.

THE Lane county and Eugene planning commissions have, ever since their formation, been urging that residents of the city and county organize in their demands for federal funds for works projects. The commissions are not, as many think, bodies appointed for the purpose of searching out and promoting the various improvement projects. They are advisory and reviewing boards before which the projects must be presented before they can be sent to the state planning commission for final recommendation to federal authorities. The initial initiation of the works proposals must be left up to the public—the same public now criticizing the apparent quiescence in local project development.

The alleged inactivity in local planning, explain members of the county and city commissions, has been due to the reluctance of residents to unite in their requests. Such unity is necessary, as the projects must have the backing of organized political units; that is, cities, towns, irrigation districts, grange districts, or improvements districts of some kind.

If Eugene is to have a modern sewage disposal system, if Lane county farmers are to be protected from flood and erosion, and if Eugene is to be made the hub of an improved western Oregon highway system, there must be a change in public attitude toward the official planners. They are enthusiastic promoters of every project which promises advancement for Eugene and Lane county; but they cannot do all of the work required. The people themselves must demonstrate their need for these public works which are so necessary, and at the same time so possible.—M. B.

A former aide of the Russian czar has been sentenced to death for distributing poisoned cheese to fellow workers. The cheese alone would have been bad enough.

How did President Roosevelt ever get Comptroller McCall to nod his head in favor of a weekend boat ride, when all the man had been known to do was shake his head?

It is estimated that the "soak-the-rich" plan would reduce a fortune like Henry Ford's from $500,000,000 to about $72,000,000. How can any heir live on a mere $72,000,000?

So Farley has decided to bore into Borah of Idaho, forgetting what happened when he cut into Cutting of New Mexico.

Probably it would be better for the United States to participate in the next war, rather than become an innocent bystander.

A new high record has been made in world production of oil, more than ever being needed to pour on troubled waters.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

PLEASED EFFORT
 (The Oregonian)
 MATERIAL reassurance of improved business conditions is to be found in the mid-year 1935 number of the Eugene Register-Guard. Such publications are impossible when the morale of the business men and citizenry in general is at low ebb, and the issue of this special number in one of Oregon's leading cities is proof of encouraging return to optimism by the people of Lane county—and where that district leads others are bound to follow.

The special sections contain sixty-four pages of interesting articles on Lane county matters, personal views of leading citizens, and pleasing array of advertising by the sound industrial firms of that section. The appeal to ex-patriates and other former residents of the community is especially gratifying; the display of possibilities for persons seeking location is strongly attractive. Lane county might well be called a state within a state—extending from the crest of the Cascades to deep water on the Pacific—comprising within its borders agriculture, lumbering, mining, fishing, a host of other industries, and higher education.

The Eugene Register-Guard is to be congratulated upon its enterprise, and the people of Lane county upon their spirit.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By WILLIS THORNTON

Register-Guard Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Another rumor that you can cross off the list is the one about Gen. Hugh Johnson running for the U. S. Senate seat of Oklahoma's blind Thomas P. Gore. The general has about decided that there's nothing in it for him.

Not that he couldn't make it. He would have an excellent chance to beat Gore. But the general, since leaving NRA, has done very well for himself, thank you, amassing a neat pile of something between $100,000 and $200,000, largely by highly paid writing. (Which he does himself, mostly in longhand.)

He might have to toss most of that stake into a campaign for the Senate seat, and while he is given a better than 50-50 chance to win, still you can't sometimes always tell in politics.

He'd be taking a chance. And why rock the boat when you're sitting pretty?

The general, except for his writing, is devoting almost all his time to the New York work-relief problem—he isn't doing a thing at present for Barney Baruch, who is in Europe.

A man who has a lot of money, like Senator Coughlin, can afford to serve in the Senate and never worry about election or re-election. To a man who hasn't anything, the $10,000 Senate salary looks good, and he, too, can take a chance.

But to one who has just made a good start in rebuilding a neat fortune, the "everything to lose, nothing to gain" angle weighs heavily.

Nailed to the Mast

A neat sidelight on public utility tactics toward regulation was outlined the other day in the Senate investigation of utility lobbying. On the stand was John W. Carpenter, president of the Texas Power and Light Co., who had come to Washington quite frankly to oppose the holding company death sentence bill.

The ground of opposition was that such regulation was more properly a state matter. Then Senator Louis B. Schwellenbach of Washington pounced on Carpenter. He pointed out that Texas hasn't any state regulation, and showed that Carpenter's company had opposed bills in the legislature aimed at establishing such regulation.

Local communities were jealous of their right to keep such regulation, Carpenter averred.

Carpenter demurred, ducked, sidestepped. He admitted nothing, but the picture of tactics was pretty plain to the shirt-sleeved listeners who crowded the hearing room.

The company went to Washington to oppose national regulation, saying this was better left to the states. Then it went to Austin to oppose state regulation, saying this was better left to the communities. When you get it down to the local community, the problem is comparatively easy.

Big Job Just a Big Guess

The vagueness of big executives about their jobs which was so sharply brought out during the stock market investigation crops up all the time in the utilities probe. Carpenter, for instance, replied to questions, that "I think perhaps I was" vice-president of this or that corporation, or "I don't know what securities they bought or sold" when asked about a security firm of which he was a director.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHEIN

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

WHEN you find a suspicious-looking hair on the shoulder of your husband or sweetheart, you can take it to a hair specialist and learn exactly from what person that hair came.

Of course, you would have to go around to all the women you suspect and pluck hairs from their heads for comparison, but with that tell-tale hair matched with the sample hairs, the modern hair specialist can identify the culprit without hesitation.

Such identification would be based on the recognized fact that no two persons have the same type of hair. Police make use of this helpful fact in criminal identification.

Human hair varies greatly on account of the different shades that it may assume, the changes that take place with age, and the different parts of the body from which the hair may happen to have come.

When you look at a hair under the microscope you will find that it has three layers, a center, an inner and an outer layer. The central area of the human hair is narrow and differs from that of the hair of any animal except the chimpanzee and the gorilla, which are apes, very near to man. In the apes the coloring matter, is absent. The hair of the beard, the mustache and other portions of the body has a broader center than the hair of the head.

When the medico-legal expert examines hair he tries to answer five questions. Are the hairs human or animal? If from an animal, what animal? If human hair, is it male or female? From what part of the body did the hair come? About how old was the person from whom the hair came?

Not long ago there was a charlatan, with a hair tonic for sale, who advertised that he would diagnose the trouble of any person whose hair was falling out, if that person would pluck out a few hairs and send them to him.

Members of the bureau of investigation of the American Medical Association took some hair from girls with gorgeous looks like those of the seven Sutherland sisters; they took hair from two fur coats, they took hair from a horse's tail and dyed some thread so that it would look like hair.

The specimens were sent from a lot of different addresses. In every case the same form letter came back informing the questioner that he or she was suffering from malnutrition of the hair roots.

We know those time-payment fur coats had malnutrition of the hair roots. But the horse's tail was in the best of condition.

Of course, the charlatan never examined the hairs under the microscope, or he could have guessed what was being done to him.
