SECURITY PROGRAM LAUNCHED.

WITH the enactment of the Roosevelt security bill the nation has been started at last on a program of reconstruction as distinguished from relief. There are three main phases of the federal security plan—pensions for the aged, unemployment insurance to take up depression shocks, extensive health and child welfare work. Though there may be efforts to test the constitutionality of the plan, most legal authorities believe the difficulties which beset the NRA have been avoided because in the security program the federal government will act mainly in cooperation with the states.

One feature of the security plan which has not been generally understood is the extent to which responsibility is placed with the states, especially as to pensions. Up to $15 a month, the federal government will match state pensions, but states will not be limited to the match amount. Each state may put the monthly pension as high as required by local needs; the federal contribution becomes an inducement to each state to do its part. In those states which have been backward in pension legislation and in those states which are limited in resources the federal contribution will be a powerful help.

The unemployment insurance, managed by the government direct calls for contributions by both employers and employed, starting now. By 1940 full benefits will be in force. For sixteen weeks after a sudden layoff, the employee who has been in service two years or more will receive approximately half his regular pay check. This is not "absolute protection," but sufficient to break many a shock, allow time for readjustment without forcing a self-respecting family to charity or relief.

As time goes on the employment insurance builds into a retirement fund at age 65 or lump sum insurance in case of earlier death. Thus an employee who has been paying in out of an average $45 a week salary will retire automatically at 65 on the convenient income of $71.25 a month. If he should happen to die at the end of 20 years, the benefit to his family would be $2,198 in cash. There are as many different schedules, naturally, as there are scales in payment.

The security program may not be all that many would ask. There is every reason to believe that as time goes on age limits will be lowered, benefits in all classifications will be increased. The future course of federal action will depend largely on the attitude in the states. The chief advantage of the plan is that it rests on a sound financial and legal base. It is a start toward assuring each man honorable retirement in proportion to his abilities and deserts.

HANNAH TAKES UP A CAUSE.

FIERY little Hannah Martin, of Marlon county, is the latest to fire some questions at the state board of higher education about the $6,000 a year pension for William Jasper Kerr. Coming from a member of the legislature, Mrs. Martin's intimations of reprisals on educational budgets will require some attention. Certainly the schools which have suffered so much from feuds, depression cuts, reorganizations should not be penalized because of an individual situation. If the Kerr pension question must be raised it should be limited to that issue alone.

The Kerr pension must be understood as one of those inconsistent things growing out of a long and involved controversy. Half pay is the customary pension. Though Kerr will not draw the full $6,000 (his base pay is subject to the same depression cuts as that of others) it is proportioned on his original salary. If, nevertheless, his pension pay happens to be more in cash than that of men in active teaching service, the fact merely calls attention to the deplorably low pay scales for actual teaching in the Oregon system.

In order to give Kerr any pension at all it was necessary to create the fiction of "special duties" for the chancellor-emeritus (it is devoutly to be hoped those duties will be at a safe distance from the new man, Chancellor Hunter). There is a certain irony in the pension demand for Kerr in the fact that it was he who blocked the application of a normal pension system to Oregon State College when President Hall was putting it in at the University. Theoretically, University people who have contributed monthly for years to the pension fund should resent the special setup for "the great Wrecker," but they hold no such resentment.

All that has happened, has happened, and after 25 years of service, Kerr is entitled to something; whether it be more or less than $6,000, the argument should be kept to that one issue. The sad thing (and Mrs. Martin touches on it in her letter) is that for hundreds of conscientious servants of the Oregon system (all outside the University) there is no pension of any kind. In many cases there is the problem of ousting some person brutally after years of service or keeping him on at the expense of efficiency. There is the big problem of correcting a vast number of injustices and maladjustments which have resulted from conflict, restoring peace and progress and the spirit of learning.

The Kerr retirement is a major step in reform. The Kerr pension, big or small, is a mere incident. The state board, we believe, is doing its very best with problems which have so many aspects that it is not wise to make hasty judgments.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER Register-Guard Washington Correspondent WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The six New England states of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut would go Republican if the presidential election were held tomorrow or the day after.

That, at least, is the private opinion of the strategists of the Democratic political machine. They suspected as much, even before the Republican congressional victory in Rhode Island. Now they're virtually convinced. Rhode Island Democrats occupying administration posts, including some smart politicians, were predicting weeks ago that Judge Risk, the Republican candidate, would defeat Mr. Prince, the Democratic candidate. But they didn't expect quite such a hard wallop. The size of the G. O. P. majority surprised them. Although the effect will be to pep up the Republican morale everywhere, one needn't accept the minority party's halcyon that this isolated election means "the beginning of the end" for the New Deal.

"Emotion" Big Factor Politicians of both parties feel that New England is an isolated area temporarily emotional—and perhaps through 1936—over the processing tax. Its textile industry is in a bad way and whether that's due to the AAA program as a whole, the processing tax in particular, the inconvertible effect of southern low wage competition, or something else again is an academic matter insofar as New England voters are concerned. The fact that New England has gone sour on the administration is more important in political calculations than the somewhat faint-hearted alibis that Republicans in the Rhode Island district picked a more popular, outstanding candidate than did the Democrats and that, after all, the Democrats had won that district only twice in the last 20 years.

Thus far the Democrats whose job it is to keep track of such things won't concede much of anything outside of New England. They're dead certain of the south and west, they claim—though some confess vague worries as to the Mountain states—if you press them—and can't see much reason to worry in the important tier of states running from New York to Illinois. Just between you and me, things are happening so rapidly these days—politically and otherwise—that no one should draw any strong conclusions about 1936 from anything that happens this month or next or the one after.

Jefferson Still Has Say So Democrats—and sometimes even Republicans—who invoke the shade of Thomas Jefferson as they orate in the House seldom realize that their movements are governed by that same man Jefferson.

Chairman John J. O'Connor of the Rules Committee reminded them of that the other day when he pointed out that Jefferson's Manual (of parliamentary procedure) had been incorporated into the rules of the House. He was by way of saying that for a long time he had been tempted to make a point of order against the "continuous fulminations" of a certain congressman from Pennsylvania—"every time he has stood on this floor and whenever the House has evidenced that they no longer desire to hear him." He read from the Manual:

"No one is to disturb another in his speech by hissing, coughing, spitting, speaking or whispering to another, nor stand up to interrupt him, nor to pass before the Speaker and the speaking member, nor to go across the House, nor to walk up and down it, or to take books or papers from the table or to write there."

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

CANCER of the lung is increasing as a cause of death of human beings. This seems to be the general opinion of physicians who see a great deal of cancer.

Dr. James Ewing feels that probably the increase is due to a number of different causes. For example, the amount of respiratory disease is steadily growing, particularly various forms of influenza. Then, too, irritation is known to play a part and tar and its derivatives are known to be irritants.

Gasoline fumes, vaporized oils, tar from roads, and other irritating materials associated with the motor car industry are increasingly coming in contact with the human lung.

An interesting fact brought out in a paper read by Dr. Anron Arkin before the Pan-American Medical Association was the fact that 125 cases out of 135 which came to the Cook County Hospital in Chicago between 1931 and 1934 were in men and only 10 cases in women.

He ventured the opinion that smoking by men was primarily responsible for this high incidence and suggested that as women continue to smoke in increasing numbers the appearance of some cases of cancer lung would tend to increase in women.

It is known, of course, that cancer of the tongue used to be almost exclusively a masculine disease and that the increased amount of smoking by women has numbers and as intensively as they do, cancer of the tongue among them.

In the beginning, cancer of the lung is like a great many other conditions which affect that organ. There may be fever, pain, cough, expulsion of pus in the sputum and with the cough, and a gradual wasting of the body, due to poisoning associated with the cancerous condition.

X-ray pictures show a definite shadow which is the mark of the presence of the cancer. However, certain other conditions affecting the lungs, for example, inflammation of certain fungus growths like actinomycosis, blastomycosis, coccidioides granuloma, which is seen particularly in California, and sporotrichosis may simulate the cancer.

Unfortunately there is not a great deal of help for the person with cancer of the lung.

During the last few years, surgeons have on several occasions removed sections of lung and even one entire lung successfully. This is, however, a most difficult and dangerous operation and not likely to be done frequently, even by the greatest of experts.

Moreover, the cancer of the lung tends to spread to the lymph glands and to the bones and to the brain and this secondary form of cancer may kill quickly. If, however, the condition is determined to be tuberculosis or some other form of infection of the lung, various forms of treatment bring good results and it is important to know as soon as possible what is wrong with the lung tissue.
