THE Archangel Michael stands highest, next to God, as the conqueror of Satan, and so his place is where the danger is greatest—high on a rock in the Bay of Saint Michel, in northern France, overlooking the immense ocean. There stands the great cathedral built 800 years ago in his honor, 235 feet above the roaring waves. It is the Archangel's "Mount in Peril of the Sea," and is considered one of the finest pieces of Norman architecture.

The Abbot Hildebert began this masterpiece to St. Michael, who was then patron saint of France, in 1020. But in 1618 the facade began to give way, and in 1776 the facade and three of the seven spans of the nave had to be pulled down, to save the rest of the church. Now, rebuilt, the cathedral retains four arches of the Abbot Hildebert's nave and some of the columns.

The famous cathedral is pictured on the 5-franc stamp issued by France in 1930.

Horrible Stomach Gas and Rheumatic Affliction!

"If anybody in this world ever had what you call real stomach trouble and rheumatic misery, then I know I am that very person, for all I had done for the last 8 or 10 years was to take medicine for these ailments," said Mrs. Brown. "My meals seemed to sour in my stomach and bloat me up with so much gas I thought my insides were going to BURST. This gas pressed on my heart and put me in so much pain with my chest that I was always having terrible dizzy spells and sick headaches. Rheumatic pains caused me more suffering than anything else, for my WHOLE SYSTEM seemed to be poisoned and full of this awful affliction. Those pains would strike me first in one arm and then in the other and then it would go into my legs, and I also had pains in my knees and even in my back and across my chest. Most every night these pains were so bad I could hardly move, and this together with my stomach gas would cause me to spend many nights of agony.
