The Register-Guard's policy is the complete and impartial publication in its news pages of all news and statements on news. On this page, the editors of The Register-Guard offer their opinions on events of the day and matters of importance to the community, endeavoring to be candid but fair and helpful in the development of constructive community policy.

OLD GUARD IN RETREAT?

THE Old Guard, they used to say, dies, but never surrenders. It does, however, occasionally leave the field at the double-quick, with its suspenders flapping against its twinkling ankles; and when it does, the spectacle is a sight for gods and men.

That was the significant thing about the recent Republican convention. Its significance was doubled by the fact that the great retreat took place in Cleveland.

For the last Republican convention to be held in Cleveland—that of 1924, when Calvin Coolidge was nominated—showed the Old Guard at the height of its power.

It was fat, smug, and satisfied, then. When a little group of midwestern liberals made a valiant attempt to remind the party of its old progressive heritage, the Old Guard rolled over it without delay or compunction.

The contrast with what happened this year is one of the most striking things in American politics.

This year, as in 1924, midwestern liberals advanced to the field with banners flying. But the solid Old Guard phalanx that was all-powerful 12 years ago crumbled and broke before them.

It fought a few stubborn rear-guard actions, to be sure. There were moments when it managed to give the convention, superficially, an echo of bygone days. In the end, however, it left the field in disorder.

The Old Guard lived by the name of Abraham Lincoln and the philosophy of William McKinley. These may be excellent things to live by, but they do not have too much direct application to modern life.

You cannot meet the infinitely complex problems of a modern industrial civilization by reminding people that Lincoln was a great man of the people and that McKinley believed in the full dinner pail.

What happened in Cleveland was nothing less than a shift of power from this Old Guard group to a set of men who understand that they are living in a changed world and propose to do something about it.

Governor Landon is a new kind of candidate for the G. O. P. He is not the sort of man the party could conceivably have nominated in 1924 or 1928 or 1932.

He belongs to 1936, and the fact that he was the all but unanimous choice of the delegates before the balloting even started is an immensely heartening fact.

For it shows that the party is not going to die of hardening of the arteries; that it has in it the ability to change in the face of changing conditions.

The Old Guard has left the field. It may return, some day; but, before it does, Mr. Landon will teach it something.

AFTER THE BUILD-UP

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, the sage of Emporia, aptly summed up the Landon situation when he remarked after the Cleveland convention that "it took Lincoln six years to grow to the proportions that Alf Landon has assumed in six months."

Of course, Mr. White referred to the meteoric build-up that brought about the Kansan's nomination. The combined forces of the modern newspaper, radio, and telephone made a familiar character out of a man who, nationally, was comparatively unknown half a year ago.

But now comes the test. The build-up days are over for Governor Landon. Henceforth, he must emerge as the individual, presenting his own case, standing on his own feet.

It's going to be interesting to see how closely "Alf" of the posters stacks up with "Alf" as he really is.

DEMOCRACY SCORES AGAIN

IN these days of tumult and shouting here at home, announcement of Russia's new form of "democratic" government comes with special significance.

At least, Dictator Joseph Salin calls it "democratic" and the new Soviet constitution just released for adoption certainly bears a great many earmarks of democratic government.

There are, for instance, provisions for two parliamentary bodies to be elected by secret vote of the people; guarantees of equal suffrage, freedom of speech and of the press, and promises of protection to small private property.

In the aggregate, of course, the Soviet constitution offers a pretty heavily watered sort of democracy. But it is significant that Russia has gone even this far toward a semblance of the American constitutional structure.

George Bernard Shaw has just issued a new edition of his "Man and Superman." Many who know Shaw still wonder who the "man" can be.

A Detroit reader asks how to identify old china. After Japan's next move, we'd suggest use of a magnifying glass.

A cloud of moths was seen flying in the southwest. Ima Dolt suggests a rally of the nation's mothers.

An "intelligence" squad was shown to have been associated with the Black Legion. Another proof that opposites attract.

CAPITOL BEAUTIFYING SUGGESTIONS

(The Grants Pass Courier)

Urging that the new Oregon statehouse design include a rotunda in which carved wood murals depict the history, industry, resources and scenic wealth of our state, a pamphlet published by the Fortnightly Club of Eugene is being circulated over the state.

In addition to that it is suggested that a mosaic floor picture the geology, geography and archaeology of our commonwealth.

The proposals contemplate, as the Astorian-Budget says, the employment of Oregon materials and Oregon craftsmen in providing a feature for the capitol that would be distinctive of the state, significant of its background and that would utilize materials from its greatest resources of timber, which would be shaped by a new technique in woodcarving.

The plan would create a beautiful rotunda, and one to draw the attention of every visitor.

What of the building interior elsewhere, the echoing corridors so barren and severe in the other statehouses the country over?

We feel our suggestion of many months ago should still have a bearing: that the corridor walls in every part of the structure should be pierced at intervals with glassed-in, lighted enclosures in which Oregon's natural history should be depicted in reality, not in allegory.

One set of the eastern Oregon country, with rocks, bushes, grasses blended into a unified picture against a painted horizon, showing the wild life of the region mounted in lifelike pose.

One of southern Oregon with forest growth and forest creatures. One of every part of our commonwealth. One for every resource and for every industry, so the visitor would wander for hours seeing our state as it is.

With the allegorical panels and mosaics of the rotunda, the natural history enclosures of the corridors would make the new statehouse a true heart for our commonwealth.

A "museum" in a way of speaking placed where work-a-day people would see and understand it. A resume of Oregon.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
Register-Guard Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 20.—To a considerable—and perhaps even conclusive—degree, the presidential campaign will be a contest between the personalities of the candidates.

Platforms will be much the same. Landon's campaign managers are at least as shrewd as Roosevelt's.

The Roosevelt record is either a great asset or a net handicap, according to your views, and you either prefer it to Landon's record as governor of Kansas or you don't.

Under these circumstances, although it's to be remembered that the record of each man is the best indication of what he would do in the White House from 1937 to 1941, personalities become important.

The infectious smile of the gay and glittering Roosevelt will be opposed to the winning, friendly grin of the folksy, small-town Landon.

The wealthy, patrician background of the "Squire of Hyde Park" will be opposed by the rugged setting of prairie, oil field, and Main Street from which steps "the Kansas Coolidge."

This conflict with its possibilities for dramatization, plays a large part in the plans of Landon strategists and it already is causing concern in the New Deal camp.

The White House is being urged by close friends and advisers to tone down any further use by Jim Farley and Charlie Michelson, boss New Deal ghost writer, of such expressions as "synthetic candidate," "man nobody knows," and "typical prairie state."

* * *

APPEALS TO SMALL TOWNER

It seems there are many small towns in the country, and although Landon is several cuts above the average man, his appeal to the average man is so direct that any personal, derisive attacks from Farley, who is widely regarded as a Tammany city slicker with no lofty ethics, aren't likely to do Landon any harm or Roosevelt any good.

The country is rapidly getting the picture of Landon—old-fashioned and homely virtues, warm and friendly small-town manner, well-to-do family man who likes to go catfishing and walks down every day for lunch to a Main street cafeteria, commonplace but shrewd, enough hard-headed common sense—horse sense if you like—to pay his own debts and his state's, the boy who sold eggs to neighbors at the age of 10, shirt sleeves and open collar on any hot day, office door always wide open to the folks, honest, thrifty, modest, kindly, tolerant, and so on.

* * *

CITE KANSAS VIRTUES

All that, along with the alleged virtues of Kansas—with a soft pedal on prohibition laws, anti-cigaret laws, and certain past or present peculiarities—is the bill of goods which Chairman John Hamilton and his host will be trying to sell the nation in the next few months.

It may go over well or it may flare back. Much depends on the skill with which the New Dealers handle it, and no one can tell.

The Landonites expect the candidate's personality and background to draw in votes of millions of farmers, city workers, and small-town business men everywhere.

On the other hand, Roosevelt has exhibited as popular and appealing a personality as any man in the White House. His charm is famous and his direct method of appealing personally to the masses of the people has been his greatest political asset.

Landon, by contrast—though he gets on well with small groups and has won the friendship of many visiting writers who have talked with him and perhaps raided the icebox at the governor's mansion at midnight—doesn't go so well on the radio and has no gift for appearances before large crowds.

* * *

PLAY UP TO PLAIN PEOPLE

The question is whether enough people will sour on Roosevelt's grin, glitter, and gusto to succumb to Landon by November.

Many former Roosevelt supporters are no longer captivated by the "my friends" technique, although it appears he still has the votes of most of the "plain people" whom both he and Landon will seek to charm.

Hamilton keyed part of the campaign in his nominating speech, when he pictured Landon as one who knew the workingman "not from information of others received in surroundings of luxury," a man of "property not bestowed on him, but gained through his own efforts," and a candidate of "no gilt, no theatrical dramatics, no overwhelming egotism, no self-righteousness, and no pretense of supremacy."

In any event, no one need get the idea that Landon—known as "Fox" way back in university days—is dumb.

Cautious and opportunistic, he has missed few bets and pulled few if any boners. His political shrewdness may become as celebrated as Roosevelt's.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

MOST mothers make the mistake of dressing their babies too warmly.

As a result of being overdressed, a child perspires freely. If it then kicks off its covers, or some of its clothing, it will become chilled.

There is increasing evidence that sudden changes in temperature are harmful to health. Of course, a child must be protected against cold, and should be suitably covered when it is taken out in cold weather.

On the other hand, during very hot days or nights, many babies sleep better while wearing only a diaper and flannelet, or cotton, gown.

There has been much discussion as to whether babies should wear cotton, wool, silk or rayon, or mixtures of these fabrics. In general, cotton is not a warm material, as it readily conducts, or carries off, heat. It can be boiled or sterilized, however, without damage.

* * *

Wool is a warm material because it is a poor conductor of heat. It is sometimes more irritating to the skin than is cotton, and is usually more difficult to wash. Wool must be cleaned with lukewarm water, because boiling water and strong soaps harden and otherwise harm its fibers.

Silk is not a warm material, and some babies are sensitive to it. Rayon is not warm, either, and must be washed with the same care that is given wool or silk.

* * *

To overcome the irritation of woolne fabrics and yet retain their heat value, clothing now is made with cotton on one face and wool on the other.

Tests made by investigators showed that ribbed knit cottons stretch from one-third to one-half in washing. Cotton flannels and fleece-lined garments lose much of their fuzz in washing. Woolen fabrics, rayon, and bird's-eye are not changed much by washing.

In hospitals, knitted diapers have been found to outwear other varieties.

Most people nowadays must consider the cost of various fabrics. Cotton is the cheapest. Cotton and rayo, mixtures cost slightly more. Wool and cotton, or wool and rayon, are next most expensive.

Pure wool is still more costly, and silk and wool is the most expensive mixture.
