ONLY BY WORLD PEACE

If a good dose of fright can persuade the people of England to rush down the paths of militarism, Alfred Duff Cooper, England's war minister, proposes to see that the dose is applied.

Mr. Duff Cooper has been having trouble getting enough men to enlist in the army under the expansion program recently adopted by the British government. So he told a London luncheon meeting the other day:

"It is difficult to persuade our own people of the dangers that lie ahead. We are told we should never frighten people. But it is the duty of those in authority to frighten the people of this country out of their wits."

"I remember very well the summer of 1914, when grave warnings were issued by Field Marshal Earl Roberts. The situation in Europe today is far worse than it was in 1914. There is no man with the slightest knowledge of it who would deny that statement, and still we are joking and laughing and refusing to face facts."

It is a strange thing, the way the mind of man sometimes works.

Here we have a member of the British cabinet proclaiming that the nation is in greater danger now than it was on the eve of the World War; and yet the only solution that occurs to him is the solution of 1914—warships, guns and airplanes—which nearly wrecked the civilization of the whole world.

Mr. Duff Cooper speaks of "facing facts." The most notable fact about 1914 would seem to be that the nations of the world, having followed selfishly nationalistic policies with a blind disregard of the dangers involved, finally got themselves to a point where they had to fight their way out, a process which came within a hair's breadth of ruining all of them. And yet it is precisely this fact which the gentleman seems unable to face.

How the human race, with the dreadful object lesson of 1914 so fresh in its memory, can even dream of repeating that experience is one of the greatest mysteries of all history.

It may be, as Mr. Cooper says, that what people need is to be frightened out of their wits. But the result might not be what he expects. It might, indeed, be the exact opposite, to the everlasting doom of the militarists of all nations.

For if the plain people of the world could once understand the holocaust that seems to be in preparation for them, and could fear it as they ought to fear it, they might take their assorted statesmen by the scruff of their assorted necks and tell them: "Here—we want no more of that, at any price. Get together and settle things, somehow, anyhow—no matter what it costs you or us. The world has lived under the law of the jungle long enough. Find a new law—or get out of the way for someone who can."

JOKES ON CONGRESS

WHAT with a national political convention, a heavily ballyhooed prize fight, and divers other weighty matters chasing one another across the front pages, the country has more or less forgotten about Congress during the last 10 days.

Congress recessed when the Republicans convened, leaving a potful of half-cooked legislation to simmer on the back of the stove, and, shortly afterward, took up the work anew in the pious hope of an early adjournment.

It had a tax bill to pass, and a flock of other bills to pass, reject, or ignore, and then it was scheduled to adjourn and let its members mend their political fences back home.

Its adjournment will call forth the usual round of comments. The work Congress did will be solemnly reviewed, its failures will be pointed out, its achievements jotted down for posterity; and underneath all this comment there will run a strange, illogical undercurrent of derision and hostility.

For it has become the fashion in this land to make fun of Congress. The congressman has become a stock figure for jesters. The dullest radio or luncheon club speaker can draw a laugh by implying that all congressmen are dopes. The cartoonist or editorial writer who has nothing else to say can always fall back on the thesis that the member of Congress is a peanut politician without vision, brains, or civic morality.

We have had, heaven knows, some odd specimens. In our Congress, and Congress has at times done some odd things. But it is about time that we realized two things: First, that these popular jibes aren't true, and, second, that to keep on giving voice to them is to play with fire.

The ordinary congressman is a pretty faithful reflection of his constituents. He is conscientious and hard-working and he does his best according to his lights. In the long run he gives us just about the kind of government we ask for.

Behold, now, what we do when we turn him into a figure of fun. We announce, whether we intend to or not, that representative government simply does not and cannot work. We strengthen the hand of every would-be dictator in the land. We help to undermine the popular faith in democratic institutions, and to make it just a little easier for the man who wants to destroy them. It wouldn't hurt perhaps to give Congress a fair measure of attention and respect or should we have a "Be Kind to Congress Week?"

A Seattle poet said he owed everything to the fact that he was sent to prison, whereas others are sent to prison because they owe everything.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
 Register-Guard Washington Correspondent
 PHILADELPHIA, June 27—Occasionally, but seldom, a Democratic delegate stops to ask himself: "Why are we here instead of having this convention in San Francisco, St. Louis, or Dropped Egg, Va.?"

The answer is that Senator Joe Guffey has once more sold the Democratic high command on the belief that its national ticket can carry the state of Pennsylvania—traditional rock-ribbed stronghold of the Republican and chief among the six states which refused to join the Roosevelt landslide of 1932.

All the ballyhoo out of Philadelphia is aimed at the nation in general, but specifically at Philadelphia and the eastern part of the state, where London will run strongest.

Roosevelt and Farley decided the Quaker City should have the convention because, as Guffey said, a rip-roaring Democratic show here might well pep up the morale of the citizens and the party workers of this area to the point where victory would be probable.

DEMOCRATS FOOLED TWICE

It was Guffey, then only a Democratic leader in western Pennsylvania, who in 1928 persuaded the politically naive John Raskob that Al Smith could snatch this state from Herbert Hoover. Raskob sent in half a million dollars on that basis.

The records all say that Hoover beat Smith by a million votes. Four years later Farley believed the same story, spent plenty of money here, and Roosevelt lost by only 157,000.

Politically, it is very important to know whether Guffey, Farley and Roosevelt have been fooled once more.

Pennsylvania's 36 electoral votes are second in number only to New York's 45. She may properly be considered a doubtful state, although some Republicans deny this.

Her pivotal character is obvious.

Inquiry on the scene reveals that if there is any area where the campaign will take on the aspects of what some politicians have referred to as "class war," it will be in Pennsylvania.

BIG BUSINESS BACKS G. O. P.

On one side the chief protagonists will be the industrialists of the state—whose leader is Joseph R. Grundy, the great tariff lobbyist; the Mellons and their vast holdings in coal, aluminum, oil, banks, and public utilities—represented politically and legally by ex-Senator David A. Reed; the Pew oil family, which is spending money as if in a holy war; and a host of well-to-do conservatives to whom the New Deal is anathema.

The outstanding single factor on the other side is President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America, who conceivably can deliver 350,000 votes and who is battling aggressively for Roosevelt.

Pennsylvania labor as a whole will be overwhelmingly for Roosevelt, if its leaders are to be believed, but already there is evidence of a grim effort by large employers to steer their workers into the Republican column.

The supreme court's recent decisions against the Guffey coal act and the New York minimum wage law are said to have solidified labor sentiment behind Roosevelt.

DEMOCRATIC MACHINE STRONG

The Democratic state machine is far stronger than ever before, since all the federal patronage and about 30,000 state jobs are now in Democratic hands—to say nothing of the WPA organization, which Democratic politicians have nursed carefully.

In 1934 Guffey and George Earle upset decades of Republican rule and were elected senator and governor by respective majorities of 128,000 and 25,000.

The key to the Pennsylvania situation is in Philadelphia and surrounding counties. Guffey may exaggerate when he promises to run up a majority of 150,000 in western Pennsylvania, but political writers agree that Roosevelt will come east with an edge and that his victory or defeat will depend on the size of the adverse majority he finds in Philadelphia.

Much has happened in the Quaker metropolis since the days when the late Boss Bill Vare held undisputed political sway in the city. The old Vare wards no longer produce the almost fantastic majorities which he was able to deliver and two years ago Guffey lost Philadelphia county by only 3000 votes.

WILSON HOLDS TRUMPS

Elections are not likely to be stolen here for a while at least. Thousands of Republicans who know all the tricks of stuffing ballot boxes and pulling voting machine levers are now in the Democratic ranks and each side is strong enough to keep the other from getting away with very much.

The big question mark is Mayor S. Davis Wilson, elected two years ago as a Democratic city controller, elected last November for mayor on the Republican ticket, and still a Democrat by registration, because he never changed his registry. Wilson operates a strongly pro-labor administration and months ago joined with Democrats and business men to get the convention here.

Davis wants to run for governor in 1938 and if he thinks this year looks good for the Democrats he may declare for Roosevelt.

He controls some 20,000 job-holders from City Hall, a powerful cohesive force, and any such declaration would almost surely mean a New Deal cleanup in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania.

Barring any such development, it seems the contest here will be a horse race, with present odds slightly favoring the Republicans.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
 Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

PROBLEMS involved in the care of infants and children in summer are related primarily to the change in temperature. Heat makes changes not only in our bodies, but in the foods that we eat and in the conditions which surround us.

Probably most significant of the factors to be controlled are those concerned with the food supply. Milk should always be put in the refrigerator as soon as possible after it is delivered.

In summer it is safer, for the health of babies, to boil all milk, whether it has been previously pasteurized or not. Boiling will destroy harmful germs which may be present.

Ability of the baby to digest food is diminished during hot weather. It is, therefore, customary to cut down somewhat on the amount of food given the child. This may be done safely, because there is less demand on the body for production of heat.

Amount of the feeding is reduced anywhere from one-sixth to one-fifth of the usual quantity. With very small babies usually it is better to cut down the strength of the feeding, rather than its total amount.

You should realize, of course, that during summer the baby will require more fluids than are needed during colder weather. If a baby is receiving eight ounces of whole milk at a feeding, the strength of the mixture may be changed by adding two ounces of water to six ounces of whole milk.

He may not gain weight so rapidly under the reduced diet, but this is in the direction of safety. It is understood, of course, that the doctor who is in charge of the baby's feeding should be consulted before any significant changes are made.

The child's food in summer should contain less fat than during the winter, because fats are heat-producing. Mothers frequently ask whether the baby may be given ice cream in hot weather. Sometimes babies are sensitive to frozen milk or cream, when they do not have trouble with ordinary milk or cream.

Certainly ice cream for children under 5 years of age should be given in small amounts, and mothers should be certain of its source and character. For older children, ice cream is a useful summer dessert, but should not be given in unlimited amounts.

First manifestations of difficulty with food are in the form of diarrhea and vomiting. In hot weather, if the baby shows signs of unusual fussiness of the bowel, all food should be omitted immediately and plenty of plain boiled water given instead.

After the symptoms stop, milk weakened 1/2 to 2/3 with plain boiled water may be used, and if no other symptoms occur, this formula may gradually be increased in strength until it equals the one the baby has been taking regularly.

In older children who suddenly develop vomiting or diarrhea without apparent cause except that related to food, it is advisable to stop food at once and to give nothing but orange juice and water, or similar mild drinks.

Remember that babies require a great deal of water at any time, but particularly in hot weather. It has been estimated that, if a grown person were to drink the same amount of water as the baby drinks in proportion to his weight, he would consume as much as 12 1/2 quarts every day.

Remember, also, that all water given to the baby in summer should be boiled.
