THE DRAMA OF THE DROUTH!

1. HERE, FOR THREE GENERATIONS—Their acres ravaged by grasshoppers and chinch bugs and seared by a drouth that may be as bad as that of 1934, northwestern farmers have already sustained a loss of $100,000,000 in destroyed crops from the Ohio and Missouri rivers north to the Canadian border. Typical of them is Harold Speaks, North Dakotan, whose family has lived for three generations in this log house, hewn from cottonwood logs along the Missouri river bottoms. Speaks has not had a profitable year since 1919.

2. HERE SHOULD HAVE BEEN WHEAT—Speaks trails a drag through his wheat fields in a cloud of dust, which is all the land will raise now that it has been pulverized by weeks of blazing sun and with no rain to nourish the plants. This field was planted to wheat in April. Only a few green shoots ever crept up through the powdery surface. But he has not given up even now, and Speaks piles his drag faithfully, hoping against hope that rain will come and he can still make a late crop in his field.

3. ONLY THISTLE AND STINKWEED—In what should be a pasture, above, Speaks is forced to carry water and feed to keep his gaunt stock alive. His waterhole dried up in 1934. In this "pasture" are only a few green stalks of Russian thistle and stinkweed, which the cattle will not touch, though they died of hunger and thirst. A brown, burned mat covers the ground, all that is left of what was once green pasture for the cattle and horses on which the farmer depends for his living.

4. PLANNING JOBS FOR THE PLOWMEN—To bring relief to Speaks and 50,000 other victims of the searing drouth, the government is taking speedy action, co-operating with the states. Above are shown leaders in conference in St. Paul, where decision to put thousands of needy at work on public projects was announced. Left to right are Gov. Walter Welford, North Dakota; Gov. Elmer Holt, Montana; WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins; and Gov. Tom Berry, South Dakota. Millions will be spent in the relief drive.

DREAM SHIP VISIONED FOR ATLANTIC RACE!

Fast as a speedboat, a quarter of a mile long, accommodating 7000 passengers, capable of making the round-trip to Europe in a week—these are specifications for the superliner shown above in an artist's drawing made from the plans now being studied by the U. S. Department of Commerce. Representing the combined experience of marine, automotive, aviation and naval designers, it was designed primarily to be a self-supporting naval vessel, which, in time of war, would be used as transport and airplane carrier. An airplane landing area 150 by 1250 feet is provided on the clear top deck. Such a ship would be by far the largest afloat and, completely streamlined, would be capable of nearly 50-miles-an-hour speed. It could operate on a $60 fare. That rate, however, would not include meals, as is customary on present-day liners. Low price cafeterias and restaurants would be provided to suit passengers' purses. (Copyright, 1936, NEA Service)

FARMERS

Even though the farmer of today has most of the material advantages of the city dweller, he has not turned from that old-fashioned simplicity of soul which is his heritage.

Today's farmer is not any longer the sweating peasant. He is an agricultural industrialist — a manufacturer of foodstuffs. But, working with Nature, as she unrolls her seasons, with the smell of the good earth always in his nostrils, he has maintained a deeper reverence for the Author of his being, than those whose lives keep them less close to fundamentals.

In about nine farm homes out of ten, you will find the family Bible occupying a place of honor in the living room. You will find the meals prefaced with a brief pause for the blessing. You will find Religion deeply rooted in the daily life of the home—not just saved up for Sundays.

And that is the reason that the biographies of so many of our greatest men and women show them to be farm-raised. On the farm, they learned something of the eternal verities. And when they went out into the larger world, they went with a solid foundation of character to sustain them.

So that the farmer has not alone fed the world physically. He has, in our own land at least, fed it spiritually, by giving it the finest crop of all—better citizens.

Next Monday, Mr. Simon of Branstetter-Simon Funeral Home will comment on Safety First.
