COUNCIL TO SEEK $80,000 PAYMENT

to be correct these items should be made a matter of record."

Hearing the recommendation, the councilmen sensed their chance to settle for once and for all some of the differences which have arisen frequently between the council and the water board which has steadfastly remained aloof from council jurisdiction.

While members nodded approvingly, Councilman Sam Bond flared immediately as he contrasted the city's policy with that of the water board, saying that if the city were behind on its power and water payments to the water board that prompt action would be taken by the board to enforce payment. Yet the council, he pointed out, had let the water board owe more than $80,000 for a long period of years without doing anything about it.

"I don't see that they are any better than we are," he said, urging the council to bring the overdue debt into the city treasury as "a matter of good business."

Hendershott Sounds Warning

Councilman Arthur Hendershott warned that before the council engage the water board with insistent demands for payment that it be sure it was "not going off half-cocked," but his caution was swept away upon the ready assurance of C. M. Bryan, city recorder, that the indebtedness was admitted by the water board's own books.

The city is prepared to push the fight, the recorder told the council.

Mayor Large indicated that if arrangements could be made with members of the water board the city would press its charges in an open meeting next Monday night.

Other Statements Made

Other comment of Auditor Horton follow in part:

"I am again recommending that your treasurer deposit each day's receipts intact. This not only gives a complete proof of cash but enables your bookkeeper to quickly detect errors and make adjustments at once.

"The revolving fund, if correctly operated is very convenient. Reduce the revolving fund by whatever amount is paid out of it during the month by requisitions drawn against it. When the warrant is received for these amounts write a receipt and replace in fund. As the records are used now no postings are made to this fund.

"Do not pay coupons in Eugene that are payable in New York. This is very essential.

"I feel that these recommendations should be put into effect at once.

"Your milk and meat inspector has not kept any records of his cash collections nor issued receipts for funds paid to him. He has turned in to the treasurer's office $159.50 for meat inspection. This has been turned over at irregular intervals nothing having been turned over after August, 1935. Receipts should be issued for collections and funds turned over monthly as in the other offices.

"I wish to call your attention to the depletion of your Improvement Bond sinking fund, $37,713.12 having been used for other purposes than bond payments. Transfers to Improvement Bond interest fund $22,223.86, to District Improvement fund $13,261.09 and to General Fund $2228.17. If possible this fund should be reimbursed for these amounts."

two-day state convention in Eugene, with another round of speeches set for Tuesday morning, and a business meeting Tuesday afternoon closing the convention.

Several speeches were made praising the Roosevelt administration, and declaring that "Jim Farley is the best postmaster-general in the history of this country." One advocat e "whispering campaign."

Lauds Public Works

The featured speaker of the evening, Mr. Eilenberger, spoke of the New Deal work, declaring it was necessary to put federal relief into public works to solve unemployment.

Governor Martin, in giving a short message, made a dry reference to the recent relief tangle, saying "If I was to make a speech I might make it on relief." He did not discuss any recent issues.

Highlights of the Tuesday morning session were: On address by C. D. Eilenberger, third assistant postmaster-general, Washington, D. C., who spoke of the diffeculty the post-office department encounters in attempting to educate the public to the advantages of parcel post delivery and the saving that can be made by business firms and private individuals who understand the rate structure and facilities offered by this branch.

Outlines History

In an outline of the history of the postal service in the United States by A. D. Lawrence, chief of railway mail service, Seattle; and a talk by William McCarthy, national president of the postmaster's association, who described the progress that has been made in organizing the postmasters of the nation into a compact and effective group, strong enough to make their voice heard in congress. He expressed the hope that the association will have grown from its present 10,000 membership to 20,000 by the time the national convention is held in September.

Following the addresses, a question box and open forum was conducted by S. H. Morse, inspector in charge, and G. A. Ollsen, chief clerk of railway mail service in Portland. Assembled postmasters pumped queries at the two men for an hour, the discussion ranging from the treatment of registered mail to the competition of the parcel post with other transportation agencies. Mr. Morse pointed out the necessity of postmasters knowing their rate limitations and advantages in order to compete with express and trucking services where the public can benefit from it.

Luncheon was served at the Osburn hotel and at its conclusion the postmasters were shown a moving picture describing the work of the airmail, "Sixteen Hours Across the Country." Wives accompanying postmasters were entertained at the Eugene hotel at a no-host luncheon. The convention resumed at the Elks temple at 1:30.

STATE DEMOCRATS MAY SELECT FISK

to have insisted upon a man of his choosing being given the chairmanship and has given his support to Cauffield.

Up-state democrats, however, resent the attempt of the Multnomah group to secure control of the party and for that reason are expected to oppose Cauffield's selection. In the event they form a united front, it is believed Cauffield will be defeated, the position falling to one of the other three candidates, Fisk, Claude McCullough of Klamath Falls, and Floyd Bilyeu, Portland.

With Bilyeu also a Portland man, it is thought the support would be thrown to Fisk or McCullough and at present the Lane county man appears to have the most support.

Confidence that the democrats would re-elect President Roosevelt this year as well as putting over their state candidates in Oregon is expressed by leading democrats of the state as they gather here for the postmasters' convention this week.

Carl Donough, U. S. district attorney for Oregon, who recently returned from Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., said Tuesday he was more than ever assured President Roosevelt would be re-elected this fall.

"Hrere in Oregon we feel confident we will elect our candidates this fall," Mr. Donough said. "We plan an intensive campaign for Burt Brownell, Dobson for attorney general and the candidates for congress."
