GOLD SUPPLY RISING?

IT would be a fine joke on somebody if gold—that prized and maligned yellow metal from which nation after nation has cut the moorings of its currency—should yet be the means through which a suffering world might re-enter the magic land of prosperity.

Such a possibility is actually in the cards. Whether it will in fact be dealt out is, of course, an open question; but it is there, waiting for the fates to bring it forth, if they are so minded.

A writer in a recent issue of the New Republic pointed out, for one thing, that there has been an immense increase in the stock of monetary gold held in the United States. In 1930, that stock stood at about $4,000,000,000; today, it is nearly $10,500,000,000.

Furthermore, the excess reserves of Federal Reserve member banks are so great that approximately $60,000,000,000 of additional loans could be made against them.

Thus if inflation means issuance of new money and extension of credit, we could have a big, healthy dose of it in this country even if we anchored our currency most solidly to gold.

But that is only part of the picture. In June, the London Economist pointed out that world production of gold has increased tremendously all through the depression. Before the depression, the record for world production was set in 1915, with an output of 23,000,000 ounces. In 1935, production was 31,000,000; by 1940, it will probably be 40,000,000.

The world's stock of monetary gold has been increased by more than 32 per cent since 1929.

As if that were not enough, most of the great nations have devalued their currency. When stabilization comes, the world's gold will support far more currency, ounce for ounce, than it supported in 1929.

The result is that the world probably will be able to issue at least twice as much money and credit, on a gold base, as it was able to issue at the height of the 1929 boom.

What does all this forecast? Here's what the London Economist says about it:

"There is a greater unused supply of money, or potential money, in existence now than ever before in the history of mankind. The gold of the Incas which is supposed to have started the 16th century inflation, the gold of California after 1848, the gold of the Rand in the 1890s—all these were trifles compared with the increased supply of gold (measured by its monetary value) which has piled up in the last five years."

The world in general, then, would seem to be in for one of the most prodigious booms in its history. A great increase in the world's gold supply has always, heretofore, been followed by a boom.

Can we not expect one now, with the gold supply rising to a higher point than it has ever reached before in all history?

NAVY PEACE INSURANCE.

ONE of the odd things about a navy is the fact that the less it is actually used, the more valuable it is to its possessor.

This fact is worth the attention of a nation which, like the United States, is spending hundreds of millions of dollars every year to put its fleet in shape. It was touched on briefly in a recent address in Washington by Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations.

"If through the existence of the navy," remarked the admiral, "we are spared the ordeal of war, and for generations the navy never fires a gun in anger or is engaged in battle—I say to you that no matter what it costs us, it is cheap at the price. Any amount of fire insurance premium is cheaper than a fire."

The weather is a bit sultry these days for any serious arguments over military policy. But the navy is a deep-water institution, and it goes where there are cool and salty breezes, so perhaps the current heat wave makes it a timely subject.

And it must be said that even if one does not go all the way with Admiral Standley in his conception of a navy as a war-preventive, there still is a great deal in what he says.

A navy's chief value is as a threat rather than an actual weapon. If the other fellow knows you have one, and knows that it can take care of any fuss that may develop in its own waters, he is not apt to come around and pick a quarrel.

And because of the inescapable geographical fact that any nation which plans to invade, oppress, or otherwise bedevil the United States has to come by water, the American navy does in fact represent the kind of fire insurance that Admiral Standley mentions.

For our navy does not merely insure us against invasion; it makes it certain as anything can be certain in this chancy world that no invasion of our shores will even be attempted.

That is why those great gray ships of ours, so expensive, so cleverly devised for grim combat, serve their purpose best of all when there is no enemy on the horizon.

Now it is perfectly possible, of course, for us to misuse the power that they represent. We could get ourselves into a war in Asia or in Europe, send our fleet far afield, and use it for purposes not strictly connected with defense of our own shores.

But we needn't if we play our cards carefully. We never will, if we once learn the lesson that our navy is built for peace rather than for war.

The longer our navy exists in the piping times of peace, the better is it proving that it is worth what it costs.

CLOUGH CARVES A TROPHY

APPROPRIATELY, the trophy in the annual golf tournament of the West Coast Lumbermen this year will be of native wood, carved by the Grey Gypsy Craftsmen of Eugene and Art Clough. It is one of Mr. Clough's cleverest pieces to demonstrate the practical and artistic possibilities of native woods. He has fashioned a large bowl out of maple burl and walnut and mounted it on a skillfully designed pedestal of cedar into which he has carved small but heroic figures of loggers, mighty men of the woods who seem to bear the bowl aloft. The colors which Mr. Clough has achieved in the treatment of the woods are the triumphant touch. And he has forestalled the probable inclination to spoil the bowl with metal name plates by providing on the bottom of the pedestal a suitable place for that. The bowl will be known as the Victor Larsen trophy, the president's cup. Mr. Larsen has not neglected his opportunity as president of the West Coast association to call the attention of the entire industry to what Clough and the Eugene craftsmen are trying to do with the wood of the West.

In spite of the New Deal and the New Era and all that stuff we notice that the grain speculators at Chicago still view a crop-saving rain with grief.

A temperance society plans to demonstrate evils of drink with a mechanical man who will, no doubt, be kept "well oiled."

Instead of using bombs to drive ducks from their rice fields, farmers might spread on some American chop suey.

Man arrested for window peeping told the judge he was looking for his car. And some people thought they had seen the last of those midget cars.

DANTZIG WANTS RELEASE

(The Oregon Statesman)

SET in the Polish corridor is the small island of the Free city of Dantzig, a port on the Baltic sea. Since the world war it has been governed by an elective senate and Volkstag with a lord high commissioner appointed by the league of nations. The corridor, which is the strip of land giving Poland an outlet to the sea, separates the main body of Germany from East Prussia, also German. It has been an irritant to Polish-German relations ever since it was set up. However Hitler, in an attempt to compose trouble on his eastern frontier, made a treaty with Poland which appeared to settle the difficulties for a term of years, with Germany acquiescing in the corridor arrangement.

As the league of nations council meets again with the erasing of sanctions and the graceful acceptance of the conquest of Ethiopia by Italy as the chief business of the session, Dantzig adds its worries to the others the league faces. The nazi president of the senate in Dantzig addressed the council and said his city wanted to be free from the protection of the league of nations, wanted to stand on its own. What is feared is that Dantzig would promptly become an outpost of Germany. Its population is preponderantly German; the nazi party is in power there which is sympathetic with the Hitler rule. It would be easy for the nazis then to proclaim the city as a part of the reich. Whether this would reopen the corridor question is doubtless what worries Poland and Europe. Russia would have concern because Russia feels that Germany is definitely planning an eastward thrust both as a stroke against communism and as an opportunity for land seizure.

Dantzig has a history of its own. It was developed chiefly by Germans. For a century and a half it was ruled by the order of the Teutonic knights. It was long one of the most prosperous cities of the Hanseatic league, that group of towns which fostered commerce in the early modern times. After throwing off the rule of the Knights the city became free, but with Polish protection. In 1793 it was ceded to Russia but after the Napoleonic wars it was restored to Prussia, remaining a Prussian or German city until 1920 when it was once more created as a Free City. Politics and racial loyalty now urge its leaders to seek release from the league of nations for closer affiliation with Germany.

THE LEGION FOR LIBERTY

(Christian Science Monitor)

RED-BAITERS may take warning from the National Education Association's meeting in Portland, Ore. The enthusiasm with which many sincere patriots were following the chase is waning. But not because there are so many Reds in America that good citizens are out of breath running after them. Rather because so many a quarry marked as fair game by the leaders of the hunt turns out to be just another good citizen set upon by the pack.

So school teachers at the Portland meeting heard that support of teachers' oath bills in state legislatures is not to be a national policy of the American Legion. Frank Miles, editor of the Iowa Legionnaire, not only made that clear in his address to them, but went further to state a concept of Americanism that patriots will endorse, and would-be patriots should try to understand. Americanism, he said, does not consist of throwing children into jail because they might fail to salute the flag:

> And neither does Americanism consist of enforcing compulsory oaths of loyalty upon any class of citizens. . . . Commander Murphy rightly believes that some of the sources agitating such legislation are as menacing to democracy as the elements they profess to be attacking.

This is a statement of an enlightened view, and to have it from a source whose Americanism is not likely to be questioned must be heartening to those who have all along seen the menace to democracy which the Legion's national commander recognizes.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

NOTORIOUSLY, little children frequently are subjected to cuts, bruises, burns, and similar injuries of the skin, which carry with them the possibility of infection. In such cases the first aid given at home is of greatest importance in preventing secondary infection or dangerous complications.

Whenever germs get into the body and begin to release their poisonous products, the human being may react with fever and chills and usually with an increased number of white blood cells.

In a severe infection there is swelling and redness of the part, as well as pain and tenderness. However, if suitable first aid treatment is given promptly, there is no reason for occurrence of a general reaction affecting the body.

* * *

A great many different antiseptic substances are available for use in first aid for children. The child may object seriously to use of any antiseptic substance which burns on application. For this reason many infants refuse to have cuts or infections painted with tincture of iodine.

Among other first aid antiseptics which have been found of value are mercurochrome and metaphen, as well as a solution of hexylresorcinol. From the point of view of antiseptic efficiency, iodine usually is believed to be safer than any of the others, but all have been found to have virtue, particularly as they are applied to human tissue.

Effects on the human body are not quite the same as the results shown by comparative tests of various antiseptics made with germs in a test tube.

* * *

Danger to fingernails, from being mashed or caught in a door, also is worthy of attention. Infection underneath the fingernail, or destruction of the matrix from which the fingernail grows, may result in sufficient damage to the nail plate to produce a crooked fingernail for the rest of the person's life.

If a doctor is called to see a patient having a fingernail under which there is infection, he will likely bore a hole through the nail to permit the infection to escape, or else cut away that portion of the nail which is over the infection.

After the infected material is removed, hot fomentation and hot antiseptics may be applied until the infection clears up completely. Then the fingernail will grow again and recovery will be complete.

Ordinarily small bruises hardly demand more than a casual amount of attention and care, since the blood and the natural mechanism of the body are able to bring about healing.

Pain is relieved for most conditions by application of heat or cold.

Stories in STAMPS

"T.R."

U. S.—current Theodore Roosevelt 5 cents dark blue

ONE of the most active and progressive political leaders in United States history was Theodore Roosevelt. Graduate of Harvard, lawyer, political reformer, soldier, historian, naval executive, naturalist, and big game hunter, "T. R." as he was known, started the 20th century with a notable record for peace and progress.

After winning fame as "Rough Rider" during the Spanish-American War, and following assassination of President McKinley, he became president of the United States. His success in bringing about peace between Russia and Japan, in 1905, brought him the Nobel Prize for peace.

His disappointment at the reactionary policy of his own party, in 1912, caused him to organize the Progressive party and run again for the presidency. This split the Republican party and made possible the election of Woodrow Wilson. Still active at the beginning of the World War, he sought to lead an American regiment to France. In 1919, he died at the age of 61, sore and disgruntled.

Roosevelt's portrait appears on the 5-cent stamp in the series of 1922-1926, repeated in several later printings.
